CHICAGO, 4; DETROIT, 0.

DETROIT, Sept. 6.—Detroit never had a chance against the pitching of Patterson. When it looked as though runs would be made he gave a fine exhibition and escaped. Killian was hit once when a few safe ones meant runs. Harvey Crawford, and Jones contributed wonderful running catches, and Robinson made sensational plays at third. Attendance, 1,900. Score:

IN THE BUSINESS WORLD

Pure Food Laboratory Established at Appraisers' Stores.

Will Expedite Examination of Suspected Importations—Dr. Wiley on Scotch Whisky.

Dr. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department, with three chemists arrived in New York yesterday to establish the pure food laboratory in the Appraisers' Stores, in which samples of all the foods, beverages, and condiments imported are to be examined to determine whether or not they come up to the standard set by the pure food laws. A room has been set aside for the laboratory on the tenth floor of the Appraisers' Stores Building.

R. L. Doolittle, who has been State Chemist of Michigan, will have charge, and his assistants will be L. M. Tolman and J. Ogden. The laboratory will be in full operation by the end of the week. The purpose of the establishment of the laboratory here is to reduce the time required for the examination of imported food products. Up till now the samples have been sent to Washington for examination.

One result of the establishment of the laboratory will probably be a very great decrease in the importation of Scotch whiskies. Dr. Wiley declared yesterday that in his opinion a very large proportion of the whiskies imported is compounded from neutral spirits, with a little creosote added to give them the characteristic smoky flavor. Special attention will probably be devoted to this branch for a while.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Compounded Perfumes Must Pay Duty—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser McClelland the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a protest by Euler & Robeson of New York against the assessment of 25 per cent. duty as a combination of essential oils on goods described as "enfleurage pomade muguet," claiming free entry for it as an "enfleurage pomade," the product of the lily of the valley. It was admitted by the importers, however, that it was a combination of the product of several flowers with an essential oil.

Protests overruled yesterday were by G. Sheldon & Co., Chicago, and Smith, Worthington & Co. and Camache, Roden & Van Sickel, New York. A protest by Fung Hong, San Francisco, was sustained, and protests by Leuf Strauss & Co., San Francisco, and Richard H. Stewart and Alfred Nearing, New York, were partly sustained.

Alfred W. Cochran Resigns.

It was announced yesterday that Alfred W. Cochran, who for the last two years has been law clerk to the Board of United States General Appraisers, had resigned his position. His successor has not yet been selected. Mr. Cochran is a son-in-law of Senator Pugh of Alabama.

General Appraisers Back.

Judge Byron S. Waite, President of the Board of United States General Appraisers, resumed his duties yesterday after a month's vacation. General Appraisers Howell and Fischer also returned to duty.

PUBLIC NOTICES.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS.

Department of Finance, Bureau for the Collection of Taxes, New York, September 1, 1904.

TAXPAYERS WHO DESIRE TO OBTAIN their bills promptly should make immediate written requisition, (blanks may be procured in the borough offices,) stating their property by Section or Ward, Block and Lot or Map number, making copy of same from their bills of last year.

If a taxpayer is assessed for personal tax, the requisition should also request bill for such tax.

In case of any doubt in regard to Ward, Section, Block or Lot number, taxpayers should take their deeds to the Department of Taxes and Assessments and have their property located on the maps of that Department and forward to the Deputy Receiver of Taxes with the requisition a certified memorandum of their property, which will be furnished by the Department of Taxes and Assessments.

Taxpayers in this manner will receive their bills returned by mail at the earliest possible moment and avoid any delay caused by waiting on lines, as required in case of personal application.

After receiving the bills, the taxpayer will see that they are properly rebated, then draw check for the net amount in the order of the Receiver of Taxes and mail bill and check, with an addressed envelope, with the return postage prepaid, to the Deputy Receiver in whichever borough the property is located.

Checks should be mailed as soon as possible after the bills have been received by the taxpayer.

DAVID E. AUSTEN, Receiver of Taxes.

INTEREST PAYABLE MARCH 1 AND SEPTEMBER 1 IN NEW YORK

Issue Limited to $2,500,000 at the Rate of $20,000 per Mile

The Texas & Oklahoma Railroad Company has been consolidated with the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, and these bonds (which were guaranteed, principal and interest) have been assumed by, and are a direct obligation of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company.

The Texas & Oklahoma road is now completed and in operation. It is estimated that the increased earnings to be derived from the operation of this line will equal over twice the amount necessary to pay the interest upon these bonds.

Application will be made to list these bonds on the New York Stock Exchange.

Guaranteed Mortgages

OF THE

Bond & Mortgage Guarantee Co.

THE MOST DESIRABLE INVESTMENT BEFORE THE PUBLIC TO-DAY.

The Mortgages are carefully selected on New York City property and have back of them the strongest guarantee, and from the standpoint of the insured, the wisest policy to be had.

This Company has accumulated a large surplus from the earnings of a profitable business, the only way for an insurance company to grow in strength. The paying in of large sums of money by stockholders is not enough to make a strong insurance company, neither do conservative companies put out unconditional policies.

Our Friends and Our Enemies.

The GEORGE A. TREADWELL MINING COMPANY has both—those who speak well and those who speak ill of it. Our friends are those who have seen the property and know all about us and speak from knowledge. Our enemies are those who have not seen it and who speak from ignorance.

Every man who has seen the property and knows what he is talking about speaks in our favor. The men who have bought largest of the stock and put the most money into the enterprise are those who have first examined the property most carefully and know the most about it.

We are now completing our large smelting plant and we shall soon be ready to take our place among the foremost copper producers and dividend-payers of North America.

The TREADWELL COMPANY has the largest property in what is claimed to be the richest mining district of the world. Its property is several times as large as that of its near neighbor, the United Verde, and just as rich. It has spent nearly a million dollars in cold cash in the development and equipment of its property, and its smelter plant when completed will have no superior in this country.

A little more stock is for sale to complete the equipment. Prices will be quoted on application.

MYRA B. MARTIN, Secretary,

Blames Strike for Poor Earnings.

In his annual report for the year ended June 30 last E. T. Jeffery, President of the Denver and Rio Grande, mentions the labor troubles in Colorado as chiefly responsible for the loss in earnings. His report notes that freight traffic of the system decreased 886,836 tons, chiefly on the Denver & Rio Grande proper. [illegible] ...ntinued [illegible]

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Irregularity was shown in the trading in unlisted stocks yesterday, and the totals were not as large as on several days of the past week. The bond market held firm, but few issues were traded in; the Seaboard new 5s showed the largest total. Southern Pacific stocks were more active and displayed considerable strength, with the "when issued" selling at 114¼ and the first instalment paid at 113⅛. Manhattan Transit opened strong and reached a new high record, but later in the day sold off on profit taking and closed near the lowest.

***

INTERBOROUGH RAPID TRANSIT.—The movements of this stock yesterday appear merely to verify the statements that there is very little stock on the market at present figures, and interested parties are holding off awaiting developments. The sale of 400 shares at the opening broke the price 3½ points, to 141, but the next sale was made at 144. So little stock was offered that at the close the purchase of a few hundred more shares forced the price 2 points further. Only 1,500 shares in all changed hands, at a net advance of 1¾.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

The stock market met general expectations yesterday under some conditions which would have warranted disappointment to advocates of higher prices. Reference is not made to anything which happened over the holidays, for nothing disturbing occurred in them. Upon the contrary, what signified most—crop conditions—were and are such that the produce market was soft, and the cotton market was easy as well. Moreover, the weekly crop report was most encouraging where the outlook is weakest, and declared the corn condition "satisfactory." On the other hand, London was a free seller with concessions, Colorado and Southern passed its preferred dividend, and a cut was announced in steel plates drastic enough, it would seem, to have other results than stimulate hesitating buyers. At this rate some sellers soon will be as inactive as their customers have been. The day's reports of earnings were inconclusive. Good ones prevailed, but they affected prices hardly more or differently than the bad ones. Norfolk and Western, for example, rose upon its poor report, while St. Louis and Southwestern fell upon its good report. Metropolitan was the only active stock which acted logically, and yielded under news affecting intrinsic values.

Nevertheless it would not be fair to compare the strength of the market to the strength of Russian securities following Kuropatkin's masterly retreat and strategic defeat of his pursuers. There are substantial reasons for the market's strength, and the best of them is the absorption of stocks. For a long time the conundrum has been: Who are the buyers? Sooner or later the conundrum will be: Who are the sellers?—that is to say, Who is taking profits? At present the eyes of the majority are fixed not on the profits of the moment but on profits which shall make present prices seem moderate when farmers begin to spend the proceeds of the crops they are harvesting. There are not enough of a contrary way of thinking to bring the market to a check by their sales, but the supply was large enough to carry the day's business up nearly to 850,000 shares. Reading was most in demand, with brand new stories to account for a non-dividend payer selling above those paying and likely to pay better returns as an investment proposition. The Pacifics were a good second in both activity and strength, and even the Steel stocks showed no weakness under conditions trying to their friends. Both Steel common and preferred closed below the day's best, but neither of them scored a loss over their last prices of the week before.

The bond market enjoyed a volume which would have been thought full except by comparison with the swollen totals of last week. However, no inference adverse to the investment outlook can be drawn from a comparative inactivity in the speculative issues. Although less was doing in them, Consolidated Tobacco 4s and Wabash Bs still dominated the list. Sterling exchange was weaker, affording further reason for the shrinking, although ample surplus need give no great anxiety.

STEEL POOLS HOLD MEETINGS.

Further Reductions Expected in Structural Shapes—Lackawanna Company Represented.

Adjourned meetings of the steel plate, beam, and billet pools were held in this city and in Jersey City yesterday, and at their close it was reported in Wall Street unofficially that it had been decided to make reductions of from $4 to $8 a ton on heavy material, such as structural shapes. It was said that the open cut had been again opposed by the independent companies, but that they had been outvoted.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Harriman Shares Lead the Market—A Rush in Reading—Rumors and Pools Hard at Work.

If there ever was a Harriman market, yesterday was the day. Not that things started with a boom. On the contrary, the market opened rather indifferently, and all kinds of stocks were active before the Harriman shares began to attract attention. But their movement was timed with the nicety of a famous jockey making a grand stand finish on the wire. It began quite like a long-distance race. First Brooklyn Rapid Transit showed in front with a little spurge, then Missouri Pacific, and the Gould shares assumed the lead, only to give way to Reading, which looked like a winner until the very last hour, when Union and Southern Pacific closed with a rush and a hurrah, which made all the other stocks look weak by comparison. The trading in these two issues in the closing hour overshadowed all other demonstrations. Union Pacific especially fairly rushed the traders' heads off, and transactions in this stock in the last hour exceeded the purchases and sales for the entire four preceding hours. Union Pacific closed at the top, and Southern Pacific within ⅛ of the highest price on this movement. Just as the market closed Mr. Harriman invited the newspaper men into his sanctum and offered to answer all questions, thus endeavoring to assure a lively opening for the morrow. While he answered all questions, he managed to say very little, except that he was a bull with a full-grown set of horns, ready to gore any bears, provided they were not too big.

GOSSIP ABOUT READING.

Reading furnished the bulk of the gossip, without which a self-respecting market cannot well get along. And right here it may be said that the gossip now is of a very different kind from that which made the air in brokers' offices look blue not so very many moons ago. Every report that was a bull argument in 1901 and was then turned into a bear argument in 1903 has been transformed into a bull argument once more. About Reading yesterday there were as many rumors as in the early days of the 1901 campaign, not to explain a decline, but to account for the remarkable activity and strength in the shares of that road. Nothing was said about the state of the anthracite coal trade. Arguments about actual conditions are resorted to only by the bears. The stories which were repeated to account for Reading's advance were all about some scheme or other to make the stock more valuable. The retirement of the second preferred was talked of as an almost accomplished fact, but when its force seemed to have been expended some one with a little more imagination got up a report to the effect that the Wabash was buying a large interest in Reading, that a connection would be made at Harrisburg, and that the Gould road would get into New York over the Jersey Central, which the Reading controls. Unfortunately, no one could be reached to deny this story officially, but it should be remembered that the Reading is controlled by the Vanderbilts and the Pennsylvania, and that Mr. Gould would have to buy a pretty big slice to get influential representation.

THE SUCCESSOR TO KEENE.

Jacob Field was again one of the biggest buyers on the floor. It is, of course, plain to everyone that Mr. Field's operations are not of his own making. In other words, in his purchases he represents big interests who make use of his ability as an operator. He has very nearly taken the place once held by James R. Keene, with this difference, that Keene never went on the floor himself, while Field is there all the time, and gives out his orders at the very post where this or that particular stock is traded in. Yesterday he gave out the buying orders in Reading.

POOL MANIPULATION.

Buying by many pools was again in evidence yesterday, and as usual it was preceded by tips as to the trend which their activity would take. Atchison, it was said, would be marked up first, and then Southern Pacific would follow. Both movements came to time.

CONSOLIDATED TOBACCO AFFAIRS.

It may be accepted as a fact that the activity in the bonds of Consolidated Tobacco is based on something more than market manipulation. In inside quarters it is known that last week a plan for the retirement of the bonds at about 85 was submitted and practically adopted, and that sooner or later an announcement will be made. The Directors of the company and their friends have been accumulating enormous lines of the bonds, which they are carrying on margin, and they are advising all their friends not to sell at current prices.

CANADIAN PACIFIC REPORT.

Increase of Operating Expenses Evenly Distributed—Passenger Rates Up.

The annual report of the Canadian Pacific was made public yesterday. The income statement for the year ended June 30 last has already been printed. Earnings were distributed as follows:

Passenger	$12,418,419	$11,001,974	$9,359,522

The increase in operating expenses was evenly distributed over the various departments. Rates per passenger and per ton mile increased as compared with 1902, but decreased as compared with 1901. In his general remarks to the shareholders President Shaughnessy says:

"In view of the contemplated construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, it will be impracticable to continue the use of the Grand Trunk Company's line between Toronto and Sarnia for the routing of traffic between points in Ontario and points reached by lines in Northwestern Canada, and therefore it is important that you should with the least possible delay secure your own independent connection between the main line and the City of Toronto. The shortest and best route, and one upon which the local traffic will be profitable, is from a point in the vicinity of Sudbury to a point near Kleinburg on your Ontario Division, a distance of about 230 miles."

General Business Items.

Arrivals of all kinds of grain at Chicago during the past week amounted to 7,480,171 bushels, an increase of 1,848,976 bushels, as compared with the previous week, and of 3,862,500 bushels, as compared with the same week last year.

The nominal rate for demand sterling was reduced half a cent yesterday, to $4.88.

St. Louis Southwestern's earnings for August were the largest for any month of August in the history of the company.

Receipts of live stock at Chicago for the week were 240,430 head, a decrease of 54,413 from the previous week and 46,717 from last year.

Exports of general merchandise at the Port of New York for the week decreased $69,088, as compared with the previous week, but increased $736,383 as compared with the corresponding week last year.

According to Boston dispatches, an assessment of $1 a share has been declared on the stock of the Wyandotte Copper Company, payable Oct. 15 by stock of record Sept. 26.

BULLION AND MINING.

Bar silver was quoted in the London market at 26¾d per ounce and in New York at 57⅝c per ounce. Mexican dollars were quoted at 45¼c.

On the Stock Exchange 250 shares of Iron Silver sold at 2.05@2.00.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call loaned at 1@1¼ per cent., closing at 1 per cent. Most of the day's loans were made at 1 per cent.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—Money was abundant and in active demand in the market to-day for repayments to the Bank of England and for meeting various calls amounting to nearly £1,000,000. Discounts were easy.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was quiet and prices were firm on the cheapness of money, consols benefiting by the expectation that the cheapness will continue for some time. Home rails also improved for the same cause.

Americans were idle, pending the receipt of New York's opening quotations, after which they hardened, became more active, and closed below the best prices of the day. Japanese were irregular, owing to fear of Gen. Kuropatkin's escape. They rallied later. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 96½. Russians were firmer. Closing prices:

Consols for money, 88⅝; consols for account, 88⅝; Anaconda, 4; Atchison, 80⅞; Atchison preferred, 101; Baltimore and Ohio, 90¾; Canadian Pacific, 128⅝; Chesapeake and Ohio, 40¾; Chicago Great Western, 16; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 160¾; De Beers, 18⅝; Denver and Rio Grande, 26¾; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 79; Erie, 29¾; Erie first preferred, 67; Erie second preferred, 42; Illinois Central, 142; Louisville and Nashville, 125⅜; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 23; New York Central, 126¾; Norfolk and Western, 70½; Norfolk and Western preferred, 92; Ontario and Western, 32⅝; Pennsylvania, 65; Rand Mines, 10¾; Reading, 33½; Reading first preferred, 83¾; Reading second preferred, 38½; Southern Railway, 30⅝; Southern Railway preferred, 97¾; Southern Pacific, 59; Union Pacific, 102⅜; Union Pacific preferred, 96; United States Rubber, 11; United States Steel preferred, 94¾; Wabash, 21; Wabash preferred, 41¾; Spanish 4s, 87¼.

Money, 1@1¼ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2½@2⅝ per cent.; three months' bills, 2⅝@2 11-16 per cent.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balances to-day was £44,000.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 6.—The tone on the Bourse to-day was steady, but internationals were slightly weaker. Russian imperial 4s were quoted at 93.05 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 507.

The private rate of discount was 1½@1¾ per cent.

BERLIN, Sept. 6.—On the Boerse to-day prices in most of the departments were unchanged.

Discount rates: Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 2⅝ per cent.

Bird M. Robinson Railroad's Head.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—New York exchange was 40c discount before and 35c discount after clearings. Time and call loans, 5@5½ per cent. Of greatest strength during the morning was Boxboard preferred. Six hundred shares before noon changed hands at prices ranging up to 11¼. There was no conspicuous demonstration in Swift's shares as the result of the developments in local labor circles. The stock opened firm at 102¾, but on sales of about 400 shares fell to 102 before noon. Can preferred sold again at 48—the recent high price of the stock—but was offered freely for profits, and on the sale of 700 shares before noon fell to around 47. The common shares were steady. Other stocks were only fairly active. Biscuit preferred touching 109 and Tool selling off to 19. Afternoon trading took Boxboard preferred to 12. Title and Trust shares were rushed up from 93¾ to 101, and Carbon sold at 40¾. The Street heard once more that the General Electric Company has secured control of the National Carbon Company. PHILADELPHIA TRANSACTIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6.—There was a broad, strong, and active market here to-day, trading in the purely local stocks being livelier than for a long time. Reading, Erie, Southern Railway, and the United States Steel issues were also heavily dealt in. The buying of Southern Railway by Philadelphia houses was a feature, and it came from sources that have business relations with J. P. Morgan. Lehigh Valley was strong and advanced ⅝, to 40½, its highest on this movement. Electric Storage Battery moved up 3 points, American Railways ½, Lehigh Navigation ⅜, Northern Central ¼, United Gas Improvement ⅜, and Union Traction a smaller fraction, to 55⅝—a new high record. Philadelphia Company was rather heavy under profit taking, and Third, Tenth and Fifteenth Street Passenger was off 1, and General Asphalt ⅝. Total sales, 40,212 shares, $40,300 bonds. Transactions:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

John D. Crimmins Buys One Hundred and Tenth Street Lots —Sales of West Side Houses—Plans Filed for New Building on Thirty-fourth Street.

Charles M. Rosenthal has sold, through Bernard Smyth & Sons, to John D. Crimmins, the plot on the north side of One Hundred and Tenth Street, 350 feet west of Amsterdam Avenue, 50 by 92. Mr. Crimmins owns the lot adjoining to the west, and has bought the two lots in order to get a plot that will admit of profitable improvement. Mr. Rosenthal has now disposed of twelve out of the eighteen lots in that block which he bought last April, the remaining ones being the six adjoining those purchased by Mr. Crimmins.

Buyers for West Side Dwellings.

Young & Gahren have sold to a Mrs. Finn the three-story brick and stone dwelling 40 West Ninety-fourth Street, 18.6 by 100. The buyer will occupy the house.

M. F. O'Connor has sold to a Miss Lawton the four-story dwelling 127 West Ninety-seventh Street, 16 by 100.5.

New Building on 34th Street.

Plans were filed yesterday for the twelve-story loft building to be erected by Elizabeth A. Wilcox at 29 West Thirty-fourth Street, on lot 25 by 98.9, adjoining the site of the North River Savings Bank's proposed structure. The cost of the loft building, according to the estimate of Architect Charles E. Birge, will be $175,000.

Lower East Side Corner in a Trade.

Jacob Rosenbaum, in conjunction with M. Ellenbogen & Co., has sold for Abraham Sivermintz the northeast corner of Willett and Rivington Streets, a new six-story tenement, 25 by 100, the buyer giving in part payment eight lots, 200 by 100, on the north side of One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street, 245 feet east of Fifth Avenue. Mr. Sivermintz will erect five six-story apartment houses, with stores, on this property.

J. Bernstein has sold for Golding & Hillman to Fannie Wolf the two new tenements at 339 to 347 East Twelfth Street, on plot 100 by 193.3.

Site Bought for New Factory.

E. B. Levy has sold the plot, 100 by 170, on the south side of Adams Street, Van Nest, adjoining the railroad tracks, to the Bronx Sash and Door Company. A factory will be erected on the site.

The Ernst-Cahn Realty Company and Baturin & Weisman have sold to Morris Lefkowitz and Abraham Lowenthal the three-story single flat 2,243 Bathgate Avenue, on lot 18 by 88.

George J. Stricker has sold for A. Frank to a Mr. Brumming the two-family frame dwelling 1,039½ East One Hundred and Seventy-fifth Street, on lot 25 by 139.

The August Backer estate has sold the dwelling, on plot 30 by 100, on the east side of Honeywell Avenue, 100 feet north of One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Street.

SURROGATE NOTICES.

DUMER, SOPHIA.—The People of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent, to ELIZABETH BORMANN, August Buchholz, Louis Buchholz, Albert Buchholz, Ernest Buchholz, Henry Buchholz, William Bodtken, Mary E. Fielder, Wilhelmina Buchholz, (if living,) the heirs at law and next of kin of Wilhelmina Buchholz, (if deceased,) if any there be, whose names and places of residence are unknown and cannot after due diligence be found, the heirs and next of kin of SOPHIA DUMER, deceased, send greeting.
Whereas, William H. Bormann of the City of New York has lately applied to the Surrogates' Court of our County of New York to have a certain instrument in writing, bearing date June 20th, 1896, relating to both real and personal property, duly proved as the last will and testament of Sophia Dumer, late of the County of New York, deceased, therefore you and each of you are cited to appear before the Surrogate of our County of New York, at his office, in the County of New York, on the 30th day of September, one thousand nine hundred and four, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of the said last will and testament.
And such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.
In testimony whereof we have caused the seal of the Surrogates' Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed.
[L. S.] Witness, Hon. Abner C. Thomas, a Surrogate of our said County of New York, at said county, the eighth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four. JAMES A. DONNELLY, Clerk of the Surrogates' Court.
SMITH WILLIAMSON, Attorney for Executor, 364 Alexander Avenue, New York.

SURROGATE NOTICES.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, by the grace of God free and independent.—To William M. Hoes, as Public Administrator of the County of New York, John Cochrane, as Attorney General of the State of New York, Mary Machell, if living, the name Mary being fictitious, real name being unknown to petitioner, being a daughter of decedent, whose residence is unknown to petitioner, if living, and if she be dead, to her husband, heirs, next of kin, legatees, devisees and legal representatives, if any, whose names and places of residence are unknown to petitioner, and in case Jon Doe, the name John Doe being fictitious, real name being unknown to petitioner, being a brother of decedent, whose residence is unknown to petitioner, if living, and if he be dead, to his widow, heirs, next of kin, legatees, devisees and legal representatives, if any, whose names and places of residence are unknown to petitioner, and to all persons included in the class or classes designated by the general designation of brothers or sisters of the half or the whole blood and descendants of brothers or sisters of the half or the whole blood, and to all persons included in the class designated by the general description of cousins of decedent, being persons unknown to petitioner, and their names and residences, if there be any such persons, being also unknown to petitioner, and to all persons included in the class or classes designated by the general description of all persons who are or may in any manner by law be entitled to or interested in the whole or any portion of the estate of James Machell, otherwise known as James J. Machell, late of the County of New York, deceased, as heirs, next of kin or otherwise, being persons unknown to petitioner, and their names and residences, if there be any such persons, being also unknown to petitioner, the heirs and next of kin of James Machell, also known as James J. Machell, deceased, send greeting.
Whereas, Ellen T. Machell, of the City of New York, has lately applied to the Surrogates' Court of our County of New York, to have a certain instrument in writing, bearing date May 25, 1904, relating to both real and personal property, duly proved as the last will and testament of James Machell, also known as James J. Machell, late of the County of New York, deceased, therefore you and each of you are cited to appear before the Surrogate of our County of New York, at his office in the County of New York, on the 26th day of September, one thousand nine hundred and four, at half past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of the said last will and testament.
And such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.
In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of the Surrogate's Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed.
[L. S.] Witness, Hon. Abner C. Thomas, a Surrogate of our said County, the 2d day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four.
JAMES A. DONNELLY, Clerk of the Surrogates' Court.

CATES, HOWARD W.—In pursuance of an order of Hon. Abner C. Thomas, a Surrogate of the County of New York, notice is hereby given to all persons having claims against HOWARD W. CATES, late of the County of New York, deceased, to present the same with vouchers thereof to the subscriber, at his place of transacting business, at the office of Eugene L. Bushe, No. 150 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, in the City of New York, on or before the 18th day of September next.—Dated New York, the 18th day of March, 1904. EDWARD J. DEACEN, Executor. EUGENE L. BUSHE, Attorney for Executor, No. 150 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.

BUILDING TRADES WAR APPARENTLY NEAR END

Overtures Have Been Made Already, the Builders Admit.

ADVANCES MADE BY UNIONS

The air in the neighborhood of the Building Trades Club was full yesterday of rumors of an approaching end of the building troubles. The officers of the Building Trades Employers' Association were not willing to admit that definite plans had been proposed by any of the unions, but admitted that attempts had been made to sound the Emergency Committee on the subject.

The overtures are coming from the unions. The first definite step in the way of a plan of settlement was taken by the Building Trades Alliance yesterday evening. The men who were locked out on buildings where there were no strikes, because strikes of members of their unions were ordered on other buildings, are talking of revolt, as they consider that they are in an unfair position. This has led the Alliance to make a serious attempt to end the trouble without delay. To this end a committee consisting of one member belonging to each trade in the Alliance met yesterday morning at Brevoort Hall and drew up a plan of arbitration which is in some respects a modification of the arbitration agreement.

The plan was indorsed at a meeting of the alliance yesterday evening, and it was decided that the committee should try today to arrange a conference with representatives of the individual trade associations of employers and submit the plan of arbitration.

The bricklayers' unions have asked the employers to arbitrate the dispute, and an independent movement has been started by the marble industry men to bring about peace so far as the marble workers' unions are concerned. A meeting of representatives of the marble industry and the Marble Industry Employers' Association was held at the Building Trades Club yesterday. Nothing was given out as to the result of the meeting. Other conferences are to be held.

It is believed that the Building Trades Alliance will not force itself as a body into any negotiations for peace that may be brought about. The Employers' Association, too, has gone so strongly on record as refusing to recognize the alliance in the present quarrel that the alliance itself will be kept in the background.

The officers of the Employers' Association seemed to think yesterday that the Alliance may try indirectly to commit the association to recognition of the Alliance. Lewis Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the association, said last evening:

"Until some definite proposition that we can consider comes before us we will not consider the question of conferences."

Mr. Harding said that Electrical Workers' Union No. 3 could not possibly be considered in any settlement. The new union of electrical workers was, he said, the only one that the employers would recognize, and all electrical workers who wanted employment must join that union. The same condition applied to the plumbers, whose National union was supplying men from a new union which it had formed. A new union of plasterers had also been formed, but it was possible that matters might be adjusted in the case of the plasterers. He added:

"Before anything could be done in the way of peace conferences we would require an absolute surrender on the part of such unions as have violated the arbitration agreement."

BRIBE FOR LUNACY DOCTOR.

Dr. Joseph F. Stack of Hoboken, one of the three Commissioners in Lunacy in the case of Lawyer Charles K. Cannon, who was recently sentenced to fifteen years in prison, and whose relatives have alleged that he is insane, said yesterday that while the inquiry into the lawyer's mental condition was in progress some one offered him $5,000 to find that Cannon was insane.

He repudiated the offer, he said. He gathered from the fact of the tender a conclusion that improper means were being taken to get Cannon out of prison and place him in an asylum. Dr. Stack, when asked for the name of the person who made the offer, said he did not think it advisable and timely to disclose the name at present, as it would probably be a matter of judicial inquiry. Dr. Stack said he would probably acquaint Chancellor Magie with all the facts and be guided by the advice of that official.

Dr. Stack also said he was almost certain that one of the witnesses had committed perjury. He declined to give the name of the witness or to go into details until he had inquired into the matter thoroughly.

Prosecutor Speer is said to be in possession of Dr. Stack's statement. Dr. Stack's two associates said that, in their opinion, Cannon was insane.

PEACE DELEGATES CHEER WEST POINT CADETS

Second World Arbitration Conference May Be Sought.

WOULD HAVE AMERICA CALL IT

Austrian Delegate Believes Arbitration Treaty Between Japan and Russia Would Have Prevented War.

The Interparliamentary Union, almost 200 strong, was the guest of the United States yesterday for the first time, the occasion being a trip to the Military Academy at West Point.

The members of the union, representing nearly all countries, save Russia and Spain, have been gathering in New York for two weeks past, prior to starting for St. Louis, as the guests of the Nation where it will hold its eighteenth annual conference.

At the forthcoming conference in St. Louis it is believed that a resolution will be adopted calling upon President Roosevelt or his successor to take the initiative in the assembling of a second international arbitration congress, similar to that held at The Hague. There is little doubt, according to the members of the congress, that the resolution will pass, and less room for questioning the probable recognition of the call by the nations of the earth in the event of its issuance.

Horace A. Taylor, First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as the direct spokesman of the American Government, extended the welcome to the United States on behalf of the President. The revenue cutters Gresham and Mohawk, escorted by the cruiser Topeka, carried the visitors up the Hudson to the Military Academy, where Gen. Mills, the commandant, received them.

Numbered among the members of the union are many who, in their youth, wore the uniforms of their country. That their soldierly training has not yet been forgotten by them, despite their advocacy of the cause of peace, was demonstrated when the cadets, at the conclusion of the reception tendered in Memorial Hall by Gen. Mills and his officers, turned out in review. When the parade was over there was a burst of applause.

W. Randall Cremer, M. P., Secretary of the English group of the union, declared as the cadets disappeared from view:

"I have seen the most perfect piece of human mechanism the world knows today. I cannot help but admire it, and yet there is mingled an element of sadness in my admiration. As one opposed to war I cannot approve of such development of the destructive forces."

The members of the union gathered at 8 o'clock at the Battery and were taken to the Gresham and Mohawk by the smaller cutters, the Calumet and Hudson. Assistant Secretary Taylor was host aboard the Mohawk and Congressman Bartholdt was in charge aboard the Gresham.

There were two more members of the union aboard than left the Battery landing. Just as the trip was about to commence the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse rescued port. J. de Pierre, a member of the English Parliament, was among her passengers, and alongside. Mr. de Pierre was told of the trip alongside. M. de Pierre was told of the trip in prospect, and was brought over to the Mohawk without delay. Dr. Felix Hauptmann, leader of the German group, was on the King Albert, which arrived in New York, and he was transferred to the Gresham before he had the opportunity to step ashore.

"I knew the two gentlemen would be anxious to make the trip to West Point," said Congressman Bartholdt, "so I saw to it that they should be kidnapped."

Half of the journey had been covered when the Topeka, running ahead, dressed ship and awaited the cutters. As the Gresham and Mohawk steamed past and the foreigners were greeted with the fluttering colors of their countries, silhouetted against the Palisades, they lined up along the rail and stood for a moment in silent admiration. Suddenly the Chevalier Wladimir de Grievosz d'Olexow of Austria, ex-Captain of Dragoons and member of the Austrian Court, broke the spell.

"Three cheers for the United States Navy," he shouted, and they were given with hearty good-will.

At West Point Gen. Mills said in his official welcome:

"We are military men, but we are in hearty accord with the principles which animate your union."

M. Cochery of the French House of Deputies, replied to the addresses of welcome on behalf of the visitors. He rejoiced, he declared, in the growing sentiment in favor of peace. He reminded his hearers, however, that once, in time of war, France had been an ally of the United States, and expressed the hope that the friendly relations of the two countries would be continued until the end of time.

The members of the Interparliamentary Union will leave on two special trains this morning for Philadelphia, from the Grand Central Station. They will reach that city at 11:50 o'clock this morning, and will be entertained there, leaving at 9 o'clock tonight for Pittsburg. Thursday will be spent at Pittsburg, and St. Louis will be reached the following morning.

HARRIMAN IN WALL STREET.

Bullish on Prospects—Has No Candidate for Governor to Suggest.

E. H. Harriman, President of the Southern and Union Pacific Railroads, made his first appearance in Wall Street yesterday after an absence of several months, during which time he had been in London and Paris, presumably on business, and in other parts of Europe on pleasure. He was asked what he thought of State politics, particularly the Republican Gubernatorial nomination.

"They seem to be looking pretty hard for suggestions for a Gubernatorial candidate," he replied, after a little hesitation, "but I have no candidate to suggest."

Mr. Harriman confirmed the reports that he was a big bull on the future. He also denied the reports from the West to the effect that the recent rate war on steel products among some Western roads had any significance regarding the relations between himself and George J. Gould, which he said were entirely cordial.

Of financial conditions here and abroad he said that Europe had not awakened to the fact that conditions in this country were on a more stable basis than ever before.

"The first thing I told them when I went over there," he said, "was that they did not appreciate the situation over here. Capital is now so well distributed over the various sections of the country and sentiment consequently is everywhere so conservative that the wild-cat financial schemes of fifteen years ago are no longer possible. The financial relations of the various sections are so close that it is possible to trace every new undertaking to the very source, and this is one reason for the great stability which affairs have reached."

Asked whether he thought the present boom was over, he said: "It does not seem to me so. This can hardly be called a boom. It is rather the quiet expansion of conditions which has brought about the rise in values. Europe has not yet been convinced of this, but I think she is in the meantime following our leadership cautiously. Prospects for business are better all over and crop advices are satisfactory."

Regarding the steel and iron situation Mr. Harriman said that in his opinion for the last four years the [illegible] and industrial corporations had caused a condition which was not normal and to [illegible]

MOODY VISITS THE PRESIDENT.

Congressman Smith Says Conventions Will Clear Atmosphere.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Sept. 6.—Attorney General William H. Moody arrived here to-day to confer with the President regarding both Government and political matters in which they are interested. Mr. Moody had just returned from a campaign tour of Vermont and Maine, and desired to talk with the President about the situation in those States as he had observed it. On his arrival he was met at the station by one of the President's carriages and driven directly to Sagamore Hill.

At luncheon the President entertained, in addition to Attorney General Moody, Congressman George J. Smith of the Twenty-fourth New York District, in which Judge Parker resides.

"By invitation of the President," said Mr. Smith, later, "I came here to consider the situation in my own district, that is the district, you know, in which Judge Parker resides. It is normally Republican by several thousand majority. I am thoroughly familiar with the district, having visited recently every county in it except Schoharie, and I can discover no indications of unusual political change. I am confident that we shall carry it by a substantial majority. Our Democratic friends are entertaining hopes of accomplishing something in the district through the personal influence of Judge Parker, but I believe they are doomed to disappointment.

"The political atmosphere will clear, probably, after the State Conventions have been held. I haven't the slightest idea what the Republican State Convention may do. The whole situation as to candidates is in the air. I dined with Gov. Odell last Thursday night, and, in response to my inquiry, he said that he knew no more about who the Gubernatorial candidate would be than I, and that absolutely no programme had been arranged."

On a late train this afternoon F. W. Thomas, United States Minister to Norway and Sweden, came to Oyster Bay to pay his respects to President Roosevelt. Minister Thomas arrived in New York from Sweden to-day.

NO SPECTACULAR CAMPAIGN.

Such the Republican National Committee's Disposition—Cortelyou Confers.

Chairman Cortelyou returned yesterday afternoon from Oyster Bay, where he had a conference with the President, and this evening he will leave New York for Chicago. A meeting of the National Executive Committee was held yesterday and was attended by all the members attached to Eastern headquarters. There was a general discussion of what had been done in the different departments up to the present time, and consultation as to what should be done in the future. It was the general opinion of the committee that a strong position should be maintained on the tariff policy of the party, and that the record of the party should be defended at every point.

There was some talk about the length of the campaign, some advocating that it should be commenced all along the line at once, and others contending that the heavy firing should be reserved for the last four weeks. Nothing definite on that point will be decided until Chairman Cortelyou returns from Chicago.

The present disposition of the committee is to attempt nothing spectacular in the campaign. There is little likelihood, it is said, that there will be any monster demonstrations such as there were in the McKinley campaigns.

Senator Platt of New York, Gov. Hill of Maine, and Attorney General Moody were among those who conferred with Chairman Cortelyou yesterday.

WOODBURY ASKS SIX MILLIONS.

Dr. John McGaw Woodbury, Commissioner of the Department of Street Cleaning, submitted yesterday to Mayor McClellan as Chairman of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment his estimate of the sum he will need to operate that department for 1905. He asks for $6,819,971.53. His appropriation for 1904 was $5,815,312.20, showing an increase for 1905 of $1,104,659.33. Of this increase $374,700.53 is for Manhattan and the Bronx and $729,958.80 for Brooklyn.

Dr. Woodbury states that the equipment of his department has never been up to date and that if the Board of Estimate and Apportionment will only let him modernize it, or even get ahead of current needs, he will be found truer economy than the present policy of letting the department lag "about a quarter tide behind."

District Attorney Jerome also submitted his estimate of the money needed to run his department for 1905 to Mayor McClellan yesterday. He wants $300,140, as against $332,990.01 for 1904, an apparent decrease of $32,850.01. In reality, however, District Attorney is asking for an increased appropriation. There was originally appropriated for him for 1904 the sum of $282,500. From time to time, subsequently, the District Attorney appeared before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and asked for special revenue bond issues, owing to the "extraordinary expenses" involved in certain cases. The board granted him these bond issues, which made his appropriation $332,990.01. The Bureau of Municipal Investigation is to get $31,705 according to this estimate.

FATAL TENEMENT FIRE INQUIRY GOES SLOW

Coroner Says City Departments Seek to Shift Blame.

HOPPER CRITICISES COURTS

Building Superintendent Says They Seldom Do Anything When Imposition of Fines Is Sought.

With the exception of the work done by Coroner Scholer, practically nothing was done yesterday to fix the blame for the Attorney Street tenement disaster in which fifteen lives were lost on Sunday morning. According to the Coroner, the various departments are trying to shift the responsibility, and he says he does not mean to let the matter rest, but will ask for individual reports from the Tenement, Health, Fire, and Building Departments, all of whom, he says, are in a measure responsible for the conditions found at 164 Attorney Street.

"The District Attorney will aid me in my investigation," said the Coroner yesterday. "I have visited the building and found that the fire escapes were not bolted to the walls, and that they were held in place by mortar instead of cement, as is now the custom. It stood to reason that they would stand no unusual strain. I have also had a talk with a fire escape manufacturer, who tells me that this same condition exists in many parts of the city, and that the accident might happen again at any time."

According to a report filed with Superintendent of Buildings Hopper yesterday by an Inspector named Michael Doyle, it appears that the department knew all about the violations of the building law being committed at the Attorney Street house, but the matter was allowed to go on without any action being taken.

According to Doyle's report, he found that no permit had been issued for the alterations, so he filed a violation. He says he found the lower walls had been removed and the building supported on needles and spur beams, and that the stairways had been removed from the lower stories.

"There was no ingress or egress to the building," said Doyle, "except by means of a common ladder at the rear from the first floor to the yard in the rear."

Superintendent Hopper admitted that he could do nothing in cases of this kind. He said a violation had been put on the building, but nothing further.

Interborough Concedes Seniority for Subway Jobs.

SIGN AGREEMENT TO-DAY

Employes Will Submit to Rigid Test, However—Strike Breakers Still Here.

All remaining differences of moment between the elevated road employes and the Interborough Rapid Transit Company were adjusted yesterday by Vice President E. P. Bryan and Superintendent Hedley of the company and the National representatives of the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen and the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America, and it now remains only to sign a three-year contract embodying the agreements formulated at the various peace conferences. This will be done some time to-day.

As was the case at the meeting between Mr. Belmont and the labor leaders on Tuesday, concessions were made by both sides yesterday. The men gained their point in the matter of seniority in seeking jobs in the subway, but conceded that motormen applying for subway positions should be submitted to the rigid examination known as the "Standard Railway Test." Mr. Bryan last night made the following statement:

"We have agreed to keep the doors open until Sept. 10 for elevated employes who may desire jobs in the subway up to the extent of 50 per cent. of the number of men now employed on the elevated. In going to the subway the men will take their seniority with them if they apply for positions corresponding to those they now hold. If they seek employment of a higher grade their years of service on the elevated will give them the preference over outsiders, but will not count when it comes to the question of promotion.

"On the question of physical examination we stand exactly as before. We did not yield because we felt that in justice to the public we could not afford to give in on that point. It has been stated by the representatives of the men time and time again during this controversy that only the best class of men should be employed in the subway. The standard railway test which we have applied on the elevated and will apply in the subway will make it certain that only the highest grade of men will be in the service there."

The representatives of the men, before going into the conference yesterday, declared that they would not be satisfied until the officials had consented to abolish the "standard" test and substitute the "practical" test, which is less severe. The latter consists merely of trials on the road to ascertain whether applicants understand signals and a color test. The "standard" test includes a medical examination, which for all practical purposes is as severe as the army and navy test, and which might prevent many of the brotherhood men now employed on the elevated from obtaining subway positions in case a new examination should be considered necessary. Some of the labor men upon leaving the conference last night declared that the question of test would be taken up by them again to-day before the three-year contract is signed.

There are several details of minor importance yet to be arranged, but nothing is left unsettled that is likely to stand in the way of peace. In a general way the representatives of the men declared themselves satisfied with the results achieved. Meantime the company is not taking any chances of a tie-up, and James Farley's strike breakers are still held in reserve in case something unforeseen should happen at the last moment. They will be retained until the agreement has been signed. The noted strike breaker had already commenced to pay his men off yesterday morning, when, suddenly, word came for him to retain them. Hurried messages were sent out for those that had already left the Farley headquarters in the Western Union Building, and before last night they had returned and been re-enlisted on the company's pay roll.

Farley even took on a number of new men during the day. This, it was declared last night, was purely a precautionary measure.

The conference was held in President Bryan's office at 195 Broadway. Grand Chief Warren S. Stone of the Engineers and First Vice Grand Master Charles Wilson of the Firemen and President W. D. Mahon of the Amalgamated were accompanied by all the local leaders and the Executive Committees of the three local organizations. The National chiefs will probably sign the three-year agreement, which will close the controversy and bring about peace, late this afternoon.

EX-MAYOR HELD FOR MURDER.

J. S. McCue of Charlottesville Accused of Slaying His Wife.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 7.—Ex-Mayor J. Samuel McCue was arrested this afternoon on the charge of willfully and premeditatedly murdering his wife on the night of Sunday, Sept. 4. The arrest was made while citizens generally were attending the public session of the Coroner's jury, which had rendered no verdict at midnight.

Crowds are gathering in the city to-night, but no mob violence is feared. The city militia being absent from the city at the army manoeuvres at Manassas, a special jail guard of thirty men was summoned.

ALABAMA MOB HANGS NEGRO.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Sept. 7.—After setting fire to the jail and smoking out the prisoners while the fire department was held at bay with guns and the sheriff, his deputies and the soldiers outwitted, a mob estimated at over 2,000 persons to-night lynched Horace Maples, a negro accused of murdering John Waldrop, a peddler.

Maples was hanged on a tree on court house lawn. This action of the mob was taken notwithstanding strong protests made by Solicitor Erle Pettus and H. Wallace, Jr., in stirring speeches.

The crowd began to gather this afternoon and to-night, as soon as the details of the crime spread throughout the country, in which Waldrop had many friends. Before the militia, ordered from Birmingham by Governor Cunningham, arrived, the mob had swelled to enormous proportions.

The Sheriff and his deputies pluckily stood their ground, but they were powerless before the mob and the fire. The local military company was called out, but they were outwitted by the men, who conceived the idea of smoking out the prisoner. At 10:25 o'clock the jail was set afire in the rear. A dense smoke spread through the upper stories and cells of the building. The Fire Department was not allowed to approach within a block of the scene and was driven away with bullets.

The crowd on the outside would allow nobody to enter or come out until the person of Horace Maples was surrendered. The Sheriff and his guards would not give in, but in some manner the negro got through a window and jumped out of the building into the crowd. He was caught, a rope thrown around his neck, and taken to the County Court House. There was an immense crowd on the lawn. While Maples was confessing his crime and implicating a white man and two more negroes, John H. Wallace, Jr., and Solicitor Erle Pettus delivered impassioned addresses trying to dissuade the mob.

They were hooted down in turn, but finally when Solicitor Pettus called on all who were in favor of the law taking its course to hold up their hands, but half in the big crowd of several thousands did so. There was cheering for a moment, but the men with the rope pulled the negro away, threw the end of the rope over a limb, and drew him up. The negro was dead in a few minutes. A crowd will make an effort to capture the negro accomplices, but no more disorder is feared to-night.

During the attack on the jail United States District Judge Shelby issued an order to the deputy Marshals to protect Federal prisoners in the burning building and obtain the names of all parties engaged in endangering the prisoners' lives.

AUTHOR SEEKS REDRESS.

Charles Burr Todd Was Confined in Washington Insane Asylum.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Charles Burr Todd, the author, who was several months ago confined for a short period at St. Elizabeth's, the Government insane asylum, has begun proceedings to vindicate his mental soundness.

The District Commissioners to-day received a letter from A. Burr Chalmers of 132 Nassau Street, New York, asking for a copy of the commitment by which his client, Mr. Todd, was sent to the asylum. In behalf of his client he also asked that a thorough investigation be had into the authority of the Chief of Police of Washington to place Mr. Todd in the asylum, and into the fitness of the two police physicians on whose testimony the commitment was made.

A similar request was made last November by Mr. Todd himself, who signed himself "A member of the New York Historical Society, member Society of American Authors, author 'Story of the City of New York,' author 'Story of Washington,' &c."

The Commissioners ordered a copy of the commitment to be sent as requested and also a full account of the circumstances under which Todd was apprehended and kept in custody. The Commissioners will not order an investigation of the Chief of Police. Mr. Todd, it is said, acted in a strange manner for several days, asserting that he was being pursued by persons who wanted to poison him.

LIVES UNDER TON OF DEBRIS.

Buried alive in a big boiler beneath a ton of brick, mortar, and steel, Maurice Prendeville of 763 Third Avenue, a mason employed by the New York Edison Electric Company at Thirty-ninth Street and First Avenue, directed the work of his rescuers yesterday afternoon. He was finally dug out of the débris none the worse for his accident, except for the fracture of a toe on the left foot and numerous contusions.

Prendeville was working alone in one of the big boilers which he was to reline with brick and cement. The old lining had become loosened and was held up by a beam in the centre of the boiler. This the man removed. In an instant there was a crash and a ton of bricks and mortar fell upon him, together with a heavy iron beam, known as the "roast" beam. The iron beam pinned him beneath it, but in such a way as to prevent the weight of the débris from crushing out his life.

While the work of rescue was going on a physician supplied Prendeville with stimulants. When he was freed he was rushed to Bellevue, where his injuries were pronounced to be not of a serious nature.

CHICAGO'S CHILDREN NERVOUS.

One in Every Three Affected with the Malady in Some Form.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—One in every three school children in Chicago, it is estimated, is a victim of some form of nervousness, mild or aggravated. This is the finding of public school pedagogues after observations extending more than a year. The prevalence of nervous disorders among children is attributed to the following causes:

The strenuous city life.
The impure city atmosphere.
The relief from noise day or night.
Lack of proper nutrition.
Late hours permitted by parents.
Residence along cable and trolley car lines.

WATTERSON'S WHIP LASHES ROOSEVELT

PARKER A SECOND TILDEN

"Roosevelt: What He Is Like," was the real subject of a speech delivered by Col. Henry Watterson at the Democratic editors' banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria last night, although the printed menu cards announced that the Kentuckian's topic would be "The Issue and the Outlook." For the best part of an hour the Colonel traversed the scale of epithet in his attack on the President. Every new picture that he made of the Republican nominee was greeted enthusiastically by about 500 Parker and Davis supporters at the tables and by a goodly audience of Democrats, male and female, in the two tiers of boxes around the grand ballroom. His characterization of Parker as a new Tilden was the signal for a storm of cheers.

At the guests' table were Col. Sylvanus E. Johnson, Washington correspondent of The Cincinnati Enquirer and ex-President of the Gridiron Club, who acted as toastmaster; Thomas Taggart, Chairman of the National Democratic Committee; William F. Sheehan, Chairman of the National Executive Committee; De Lancey Nicoll, George Foster Peabdy, Norman E. Mack, Urey Woodson, Josephus Daniels, and others.

Col. Watterson, after receiving an ovation during which the band played, napkins were waved by all the diners standing, and cheers resounded without ceasing for fully a minute, said:

"In order to allay curiosity and suppress conjecture—or words to that effect—let me say in the beginning that I believe we can win this Presidential battle. I'll go further and say that, with any even show down of powder and ball, it will be our own fault if we lose it."

Until the finish of the campaign, he said, each political party would show its full strength, and therefore the result would depend on the independent vote.

"In the five debatable States—New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, in the East, and Wisconsin and Indiana in the West—there are, roughly estimated, a million of these independent votes," he continued. "Half of them are Germans; the other half are Mugwumps and floaters. For the life of me, I can't see how any self-respecting Mugwump can vote for Roosevelt, the recreant civil service reformer; nor any intelligent German, either, as much as the President resembles the Kaiser.

"'Prudery, the jurist,' means peace with all the Nations, entangling alliances with none; Roosevelt, the war lord, means eruptions at home, complications abroad, designs to perpetuate the Republican dynasty and to continue its favorites in power. Every economic interest must pause before an issue so transcendent."

The speaker said that if he were a Republican—and many there were around Bitter Creek who thought him not much better—he would vote against Roosevelt and Fairbanks. Being a plain American he would do this anyway, because it would be "the upright thing to do, the enlightened thing to do, the prudent and honest thing to do." In spite of Democratic mistakes, he said, the Democratic heart had continued to beat to the principles of liberty and the Constitution.

The Real Issue.

"The issue before us," he said, "is whether the people will allow the Republican Party to grow so potent, so to intrench itself in power, as that nothing short of some dire convulsion shall be able to uproot it, or whether they shall, before it be too late, take Roosevelt and Fairbanks by the hand and bid them stand aside, while in the persons of Parker and Davis they recover into their own hands the lost balance of power.

"Inevitably the personality, the character, and performances of Theodore Roosevelt occupy the foremost place in the public mind. They will constitute the chief horn of the people's dilemma in the coming campaign. They are, as it were, the beginning and the end of the chapter. Yet, because we propose to discuss the President, and to hold him to a just measure of accountability, we are accused of abusing him.

"For my part, I would not utter an unkind or a discourteous word. I admit that he is as sweet a gentleman as ever scuttled a ship or cut a throat. Indeed, very much that kind of a gentleman. Has he not scuttled the ship of civil service and cut the throat of reciprocity, hoisting the black flag over the South the while? Has he ever obeyed the law in case it stood in the way of his humor?"

Cries of "No! No!" came from the audience, and Col. Watterson cited as one of the ill-conceived Roosevelt acts of the past the removal of a State Attorney here in New York. Next he referred to the "time when, by a scratch of his pen, he usurped the power of Congress and added many millions of outlay to the pension rolls.

"Is he not responsible," said the speaker, "for the fly-by-night theatrical combination miscalled the Republic of Panama? Was his treatment of Miles and Schley fair, or the act of a wise and considerate President? [Cries of "No!"] Were his operations against the Northern Securities not the merest play to the galleries, achieving thus far nothing beyond the throwing of a little dust into the eyes of the unthinking people? Was his promotion of Wood fair or—"

Col. Watterson was interrupted by shouts of "Rank!" "Rotten!" from all parts of the room. He passed to the postal frauds, saying President Roosevelt's actions in that matter were solely for effect. The President's whole career, he declared, as illustrated by doings and writings, introduced America to "an adventurer upon the high seas of public life, with no rudder or compass except his own ambition."

"And if we have seen these things in the green leaf," continued the speaker, "what may we expect to see in the brown?"

He said he feared an election for Roosevelt this year might foretell one in 1908, and perhaps in 1912. "As a Republican," he added, "I would take no such risks; as an American I shall not." The United States, he lamented, had changed its character until it was coming to be an empire more dazzling than Rome in the height of her

STEEPLECHASE ON RAILROAD.

Hackman's Horse with Surrey Holds Up Mount Vernon Trains.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Sept. 7.—A half dozen through expresses and local trains on the New Haven Railroad were held up this afternoon by a horse and surrey which became lodged in a deep cut between Mount Vernon and Woodlawn. The horse and wagon belonged to S. Levine, a local hackman.

The animal was standing at the station, and while the driver went into the baggage room he took fright and ran down the tracks, cutting across platforms and switches, and going into the cut 50 feet deep where the tracks are depressed through Mount Vernon. A gang of Italian laborers were at work in the cut, and when they saw the hackman's beast coming down the tracks at breakneck speed, taking switches and signal wires like a hunter, they dropped their picks and shovels and scrambled up the embankment. The horse continued his mad flight until he reached the Tenth Avenue Bridge, where the wheels of the surrey caught in the signal wires and held him fast.

An express train was due at the time, and there probably would have been a serious accident had not Policeman Moore, who had followed the runaway, notified the operator in the Mount Vernon tower to hold up the trains. In a few minutes a half dozen trains in both directions were held up. One express was just entering the cut at Woodlawn when the engineer saw the signal. There was no way of getting the horse out of the cut except to drive him either to Woodlawn or Mount Vernon. Mount Vernon was nearer, so Policeman Moore unhitched the steed and drove him to the Mount Vernon station. It was impossible to get the surrey out without delaying the evening commuters' trains, so the hackman will let it remain in the cut until after 12 o'clock to-night.

THIEVES' HARVEST IN HARLEM.

Apartment thieves who have been busy on the upper east side during the past couple of weeks made a raid in the five-story flathouse 1,664 Third Avenue yesterday afternoon, broke into three apartments, and carried off about $500 worth of jewelry and cash.

The hall door was pried open in each instance, and each apartment was ransacked for valuables from parlor to kitchen. Mrs. Gustave Hopkins's apartment on the second floor was visited first, and there hidden away in the bottom of a bureau drawer the thieves discovered three gold watches, valued at $125; a diamond ring, valued at $75; a gold breastpin, and other jewelry. Mrs. Hopkins is out of town. Next the robbers tried the bell of Mrs. J. Callanan's apartment, and finding no one at home, promptly forced the door and began operations.

The thieves found nothing of value until they discovered a small cast-iron safe. This they took to the roof, where it was smashed in a dozen pieces against the stone coping. Pocketing the contents, $47 in cash and some jewelry, they next visited the rooms of Mrs. M. J. Connor on the top floor of the same house. There luck was against them, for after what was evidently a careful search, they found only an old pocketbook containing 20 cents and overlooked a new one with about $25 in it.

Other tenants in the block have also been robbed recently, and Mrs. H. Jurgens, who keeps a confectionery store at 1,672 Third Avenue, declares she has been robbed three times in the last six months. In each case the police have been notified, but no arrests have been made, and the robberies continue.

WANTS PARKER'S RYE CROP.

Maryland Woman's Scheme to Raise Money and Help His Candidacy.

Special to The New York Times.

ESOPUS, Sept. 7.—Mrs. N. P. O'Nell came here to-day from her home in Maryland to buy up Judge Parker's rye crop. Rosemount grows anually about fifty bushels of the cereal, which has never yet been put to very profitable use. Mrs. O'Nell plans to ship the rye crop to her home, thrash it there, and bottle the kernels, one hundred to the bottle.

She would tie ribbons about the necks of the bottles, label one side "Parker rye" and the other side "Part of the Judge's harvest," and sell them to souvenir hunters and enthusiastic Democrats. With the proceeds she purposes to complete the education of two sons.

At Rosemount to-day she said she must have the nominee's rye crop at any cost, and pleaded so long and so forcefully that it was partly promised her at market prices. One of her arguments was that the souvenir bottles would greatly stimulate the Judge's canvass in the State which she said had a weakness for rye in any form or fashion.

RUNAWAYS KILL BROOKLYN MAN

W. H. Higgins Thrown from Carriage at Hicksville, L. I.

With Charles Hallock, the proprietor of the hotel, he started out for a drive with a pair of horses, one of which belonged to Mr. Hallock and one to a guest.

At the Grand Central Hotel, in Hicksville, Mr. Hallock left the buggy. He had just entered the hotel when the horses took fright at a passing train and bolted. As the horses made a sharp turn around the corner into Broadway Mr. Higgins was thrown out on his head. He was picked up unconscious, and died a short time after in Dr. Otto Heydemann's office near by.

Mr. Higgins's body was brought here this morning, and will be taken to Brooklyn to-night. He was sixty-six years of age.

250 Gypsies Ordered Back.

The Government has ordered the deportation of the band of 250 gypsies who arrived here last week on the steamship Carpathia of the Cunard Line and who are now detained at Ellis Island. The deportation, it is said, will be the largest ever made. The Government's orders cannot be carried out, however, until the forty or more children belonging to the band who were taken with the measles and are now in the Kingston Avenue Hospital, Brooklyn, are able to travel.

NO STORM, HUGE WAVES, ON CALIFORNIA COAST

Oppressive Heat Also Is Ascribed to a Volcano at Sea.

GREAT DAMAGE ALONG SHORE

Huge Wharf Is Doomed and Men Fight Tide—Thermometer at 108 in San Francisco.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 7.—Reports of damage by great billows which are rolling in from the sea are coming in from many points along the southern coast of California. The billows are believed to be occasioned by some peculiar phenomena, probably volcanic disturbances far out in the ocean. While there is scarcely a cupful of wind, enormous waves, in some instances reported as high as forty feet, roll ceaselessly along the shores. Word comes to-day that the wharf at Hueneme is doomed to total destruction.

Hueneme is one of the best sheltered landings on the Southern coast. It is shielded on the south and west by a reef and the Island of Anacopa. The sea there, in ordinary times, is like a millpond. The chain of islands sheltering Hueneme and all Santa Barbara landings is unquestionably volcanic, being the tops of a chain of mountains submerged in past ages.

The island of Santa Cruz, next to Anacopa on the West, has an extinct crater showing a lava flow into Prisoner's Harbor. But there has been no volcanic activity there in recent times.

From the fact that the present great tidal disturbance is being felt at Hueneme and south of there and with only slightly decreased force at Ventura, Santa Barbara, and more western channel ports, the seat of volcanic activity would seem to be at some point in the ocean outside of the Channel Islands. Possibly it is at San Nicolas Island, also of volcanic origin, fifty miles outside the inner islands and seventy miles from the mainland.

At Terminal Island the seas wrought considerable havoc, and hundreds of men are at work piling up sacks of sand to form breakwaters. There is grave reason to fear serious damage to the work of construction on the outer deep-water harbor at San Pedro. Immense waves are sweeping over the breakwater, and ship masters lying outside are uneasy lest their vessels drag anchor and be cast upon the rocks under Point Firmin.

Several cottages are inundated at Long Beach and at Ocean Park, and many pleasure wharves have been damaged.

Never before in the history of California has the mercury climbed higher on a September day than it did at 1 o'clock this afternoon. It broke the record for September by reaching 100.02 degrees in the signal service office and 108 degrees on the street.

The hot wave struck California yesterday, and it has been growing hotter ever since. The Weather Bureau reports that the high mark was reached at 3 o'clock, but tonight it is remarkably sultry. By to-morrow night cool winds are expected and the brief taste of Summer weather will have gone. At 7 o'clock this morning it was 85 degrees Fahrenheit, and the heat became more oppressive as the day progressed.

The heat is more pronounced in San Francisco, Sacramento, and the San Joaquin Valley than further North and South. The wave, they say, is the result of pressure distribution after air, which prevents any progress of cooler air from the sea.

The records show that it was six degrees hotter to-day than ever before in San Francisco during September. Twice before the mercury reached 94 degrees, on Sept. 8, 1886, and Sept. 22, 1895.

Reports from San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys show almost unprecedented heat, ranging from 110 to 130 degrees in the shade. Only the absence of humidity prevented such heat from being attended by many fatalities.

BRAVE LAD PINNED UNDER CAR.

Eight-year-old George Schroeder of 406 Ralph Street, Ridgewood, L. I., was run down by a trolley car in Wyckoff Avenue near Myrtle Avenue last evening and pinned under the forward truck. The boy had been playing tag, and ran directly in front of the car. He was dragged fifteen feet and deep wounds were cut in his legs and head.

A crowd quickly gathered and attempts were made to extricate the lad, but to no purpose. The small sufferer was conscious all this time, but he uttered no cry, coolly watching the efforts of those around and urging them to lift the car. A score of men put their shoulders to the side of the car and slowly raised it enough to admit of the boy being dragged out. He was carried into a nearby drug store and his wounds bound up temporarily.

BANKER'S RACE WITH DEATH.

Edward Bond Chartered Train and Yacht to Reach Child's Bedside.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 7.—With the aid of a special train and a yacht Francis Edward Bond, the banker, reached Islesboro, Me., in time to see his little daughter Margaret before she died.

The physicians found on Saturday that she had appendicitis and that an operation would be necessary. Mr. Bond was informed on Sunday. He left town immediately, but reached New York too late to catch the train for Portland.

After a hasty consultation with a railroad official a special train, consisting of a locomotive and a passenger coach, was made up and the right of way over the road was given to it. The run to Portland was made in record-breaking time.

There Mr. Bond chartered a small yacht. The craft put to sea with her steam at highest pressure, and in less than an hour the father reached the bedside of his daughter. He had made the trip in a little more than ten hours. The child died yesterday.

JAPAN TO BUILD BATTLESHIPS.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 7.—Agents of the Japanese Government to-day closed a contract with the Carnegie Steel Company for an order of 7,500 tons of the finest grade nickel steel plates.

The order will keep the 84-inch and 184-inch mills of the Homestead plant busy for three months.

The first intimation that Japan was about to begin the construction of battleships at her own dockyards was contained in some of the letters from European correspondents on the Manshu Maru, the vessel which took the foreign naval attachés and correspondents on a tour of the naval bases in Japan, Korea, and elsewhere. It was stated that Japan would begin the building of two first-class battleships this Autumn, and that the work on them would be rushed.

Hitherto Japan has only constructed cruisers, which have been built at the imperial yards at Yokosuka and Kure. The two latest home-built ships added to the navy are the Nutaka and the Tsushima, both of them very effective and well-constructed vessels of their type.

It is said that Japan's building yards are organized and equipped in a manner which cannot be excelled by any other similar institutions in the world.

The arsenal at Kure is now capable of completely arming a battleship. Large guns are also manufactured at Osaka.

The victory of the Republicans in Vermont and the good showing made in Arkansas had the effect yesterday of changing materially the odds on the Presidential campaign.

The followers of Roosevelt offered money freely at 2 to 1, while the favorers of Parker became alarmed, apparently, by the outlook and withdrew all offers at the prevailing odds, and offered nothing better than 4½ to 1. No bets were reported.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 7.—The new steamship Mohican, built by the Cramp Shipbuilding Company, for William P. Clyde & Co., was delivered to-day. The completion of the Mohican creates a new record in shipbuilding on the Atlantic Coast.

The design of the vessel was decided on on March 4. The first material was received at the shipyard on March 15, the keel was laid May 3, and the ship was launched Aug. 6. Nineteen days later the machinery had been installed and the vessel was delivered one month after being launched, nine days in advance of contract time. The Mohican will ply between New York and Wilmington, N. C.

Gov. Taylor has been married three times. He was divorced only a few months ago from his second wife at Knoxville.

KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE.

Unidentified Man Run Over by Proctor Theatre Advertising Machine.

An unidentified man was killed early this morning by a Proctor Theatre advertising automobile at One Hundred and Twentieth Street and Madison Avenue. The machine, which is exceedingly heavy, ran over the man and he was instantly killed.

In the man's pocket was found a card bearing the name of the Hotel Marie Antoinette, but nothing which would reveal his name. He was about forty years old.

CLARENCE MACKAY'S AUTO UPSET.

Collides with Farm Wagon—One of the Chauffeurs Injured.

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 7.—Clarence H. Mackay had a narrow escape while on his way to New York in an automobile last night. Accompanied by two chauffeurs, he was driving across Edison's Corners, at East Williston, when the machine collided with a wagon driven by Farmer Richard Reilly.

The wagon was demolished and the automobile toppled over on its side, Mr. Mackay and his chauffeurs being thrown out. Mr. Mackay escaped with a scratch on the right knee. One chauffeur was unhurt and the other only had a few scratches. Farmer Reilly was shaken up a bit and had a few bruises.

KUROKI STRIKES AT FOE NEAR MUKDEN

Paris Hears That a Great Battle Is In Progress.

OFFICIAL NEWS HELD BACK

LONDON THINKS IT OMINOUS

Russian Officials Profess to Believe That Kuropatkin's Host Is Now Out of Danger.

PARIS, Thursday, Sept. 8.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Echo de Paris says:

[If it be true that Gen. Kuroki has engaged the First and Seventeenth Army Corps in battle near Mukden, there is good reason to believe that Gen. Kuropatkin's main army is in grave danger of isolation.

The First Corps is Gen. Stakelberg's, and the Seventeenth is composed of troops from Europe, part of which evidently were with Gen. Orloff at Yen-tai. As these troops were nearer to Mukden than any others of Kuropatkin's it is probable they were rushed forward to hold Kuroki's main army off the railway. That Kuropatkin's main army has not reached Mukden is indicated by the Russian official explanation that the roads have been made almost impassable by rains and the Japanese official declaration on Tuesday that it was still at Yen-tai.

Kuroki had two forces moving to cut off Kuropatkin, one paralleling the Russian retreat and the other coming from the southeast. It is possible that they have combined for the attack.]

NO NEWS OF KUROPATKIN.

Russian War Office, If It Has Any Information, Withholds It.

ST. PETERSBURG, Thursday, Sept. 8, 2:02 A. M.—The General Staff is not displaying great anxiety over the alarmist reports that Gen. Kuropatkin is in serious danger of being cut off, but if it had any information from the front yesterday (Wednesday) it has not revealed it, and the officials decline to say even if they know whether Gen. Kuropatkin purposes taking his army north of Mukden.

An officer of the General Staff said to The Associated Press last night:

"I believe it is safe to say that Gen. Kuropatkin's army is now out of danger. Our advices since Monday indicate that the fighting is of an insignificant character, and I do not believe that the tired Japanese troops are capable of seriously threatening the line of retreat. The greatest difficulty our army is now having to contend with is the terrible condition of the roads, owing to the rain of Monday and Tuesday.

"Our information is that the bulk of the baggage has already passed through Mukden. This is the usual procedure in the case of any retreat."

Kuropatkin's movements, after all, must depend chiefly on the tactics of the Japanese, with whom lies the initiative. If the Japanese continue to press north in the hope of cutting off the Russians and bringing them to bay, then Kuropatkin will be obliged to move north to circumvent them. But both armies are already terribly exhausted, and if they again come into grip the result will depend largely upon which of them is able to throw the more fresh reserves into the fight.

If there is a race northward it is apparent that the greatest danger will come at the narrow defile of Tie-Ling, north of Mukden, but the authorities here seem fairly well satisfied with the situation and are confident of its ultimate outcome.

Slump on St. Petersburg Bourse.

Prices on the Bourse, however, were still weaker yesterday, Russian fours dropping another quarter point, to 91¾.

It was said here yesterday that the bulk of the Russian army was near Mukden, where Gen. Kuropatkin had been since Monday. His troops, it was added, were not entering the city, but were taking up prepared positions around Mukden. While there was no specific information on this point, the General Staff believed that only a small rear guard was in the neighborhood of Yen-Tai.

According to the War Office calculations, the whole Russian Army should reach Mukden to-night. Gens. Kuroki and Kuropatkin, it is said, have been marching northward along parallel lines, both armies being greatly hampered by heavy roads, the Japanese in a rough region and the Russians along a flat country, but embarrassed by the high Chinese corn, which prevented marching on the side of the main roads.

No difficulty, it is said, is being experienced at the Hun River, (three miles south of Mukden,) where bridges had been provided for crossing the stream. There has been constant fighting at the Russian rear and along the eastern wing, but so far as is known by the War Office nothing of importance has occurred since the retreat began.

fighting have been received. How long the run of casualties ultimately will be can be estimated by the official report of the number of officers killed or wounded between Aug. 26 and Aug. 31 in a single division.

This division, that of Gen. Kondratovitch, which is under Gen. Zaroubaieff and which formed part of the Russian right, below Liao-Yang, lost 12 officers killed, 35 wounded, and 1 missing.

Japanese Staff Silent.

TOKIO, Sept. 7, (8 P. M.)—The General Staff has not yet made public any details of the battle of Liao-Yang.

It is reported that the Japanese, notwithstanding the ravages of fire, captured vast accumulations of Russian stores and ammunition at Liao-Yang.

The people are still celebrating the victory, but there is considerable speculation over the official silence regarding Gen. Kuroki's movements since Sunday.

The Kokumin says it learns on good authority that Kuroki, after taking the heights near Hei-ying-Tai, (about fifteen miles northeast of Liao-Yang,) occupied a line from Yen-Tai to the mines by hot pursuit of the Russians Sept. 4 and 5. The Russians, who, it was said, were concentrated twenty miles north of Liao-Yang, are now retreating in the direction of Mukden. The pursuit was obstructed by the high millet. The Russians destroyed their stores, but numbers of guns and quantities of ammunition and other supplies were captured in the fortifications and near the railroad station.

The Nichi Nichi says it thinks the Japanese casualties may exceed those of the Russians, owing to the latter having occupied fortified positions in superior numbers.

The report that the Russians have occupied Sing-min-Tung (about thirty miles west of Mukden) is denied. A large force of Chinese bandits is displaying activity in the vicinity of Sing-min-Tung, but it is supposed that the Russians will not take action unless compelled to do so.

The report that Lieut. Terauchi, son of Lieut. Gen. Terauchi, Minister of War, was killed in the fighting before Liao-Yang is denied to-day.

Preliminary regulations for the National Guard were gazetted to-day.

Another Great Battle Expected.

LONDON, Thursday, Sept. 8.—The Standard voices a view now very prevalent here—that the continued Japanese silence bodes ill for the Russians.

The Morning Post, though confessedly unable to sum up the situation, owing to the absence of Japanese official reports, thinks that Gen. Kuroki may have crossed the Hun River to the east of Mukden.

It is not believed here that Gen. Kuropatkin's reported arrival at Mukden solves the problem of his retreat. "Where will Kuropatkin stop?" is what is asked here.

The Daily Telegraph holds that the latest developments are merely the prelude to a "colossal conflict looming in the future."

Most of the English critics look for a repetition of the Liao-Yang battle at Tie-ling or in that neighborhood.

Scarcely any London newspaper believes that Kuropatkin has brought the bulk of his forces with him to Mukden.

A correspondent of The Daily Mail at Kupang-Tse, cabling under date of Sept. 7, says:

"Rail cars, at the rate of eighty a day, loaded with wounded, are passing through the station. The shrapnel injuries are frightful, and a majority of the men succumb on the journey to the hospital.

"Correspondents arriving here keenly resent their treatment by the Japanese and declare that they see nothing of the war. They are treated as though they are spies, while native correspondents are permitted to see the fighting and to telegraph freely."

SHANGHAI, Sept. 7.—Chinese reports are to the effect that thousands of Chinese are being forced to construct earthworks at Tie-Ling, where Gen. Kuropatkin will make his next stand.

RETREATING RUSSIANS' PERIL.

Mukden Dispatch Says Part of Army Is in Danger of Being Cut Off.

All day and night yesterday the Japanese in the hills on the east road shelled the Russian troops. In one instance the Japanese infantry attacked a large force of Russian infantry and artillery which had taken to the hills, running parallel to the Japanese, in the protecting flank of the retreating army.

The roads are in a frightful state owing to the heavy rain yesterday.

CUTS OFF RUSSIANS IN KOREA.

Report That a Japanese Army Has Landed Near Possiet Bay.

LONDON, Thursday, Sept. 8.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Söul says there is an unconfirmed report there that the Japanese have landed several fresh divisions of troops in the vicinity of Possiet Bay, cutting off the retreat of the Russians in Northeastern Korea.

MIKADO'S THANKS TO ARMY.

His Message of Congratulation Was of Unprecedented Length.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 7.—The Mikado's message of congratulation to the army on the victory at Liao-Yang is of unprecedented length. It speaks of the end of the war as still long distant.

Field Marshal Oyama says the spirits of the troops are high in spite of ten days of continuous fighting, in the course of which they forced several strongly fortified lines with heavy sacrifices.

Official reports received in Tokio yesterday show that the Japanese Right Army (Kuroki's force) did not carry the positions on the highlands westward of Hei-ying-Tai, on the right bank of the Tai-Tse River, until the afternoon of Sept. 4.

The Japanese left and centre armies, (Oku's and Nodsu's,) when the reports were dispatched, had not crossed the Tai-Tse, but a portion of them had been sent to attack the hills at Mu-Chwang, overlooking the railway.

The main body of the Russians had not retreated north of Yen-Tai, and a portion of the Russian Army was still at Ying-shui-Su, close to Liao-Yang.

VLADIVOSTOK, Sept. 7.—Lieut. Newton A. McCully, the United States Naval Attaché, arrived here to-day from Mukden.

HOW JAPANESE VALOR PREVAILED AT AN-PING

Mikado's Troops Wriggled Through Corn and Burst on Foes.

DASH BY TWO MOUNTAIN GUNS

Advanced Close to the Russians and Then Opened Fire—Victory Seemed to Come by Magic.

LONDON, Thursday, Sept. 8.—A correspondent of The Daily Mail with Gen. Kuroki, telegraphing on Aug. 28 describing the battle of An-Ping, says:

"The Russian position was exceedingly strong. On the left was a long line of mountain ridges, and gradually shelving down on the front and right were straight slopes steeply descending for 600 feet, then bending at sharper angles for several hundred feet. The slopes were planted with maize, millet, and potatoes.

"The movements of the Japanese were greatly hampered by the configuration of the country, the unceasing succession of mountains, which were almost pathless, making it impossible for them to bring forward their field guns, and mountain artillery was therefore used.

"After opening with shrapnel the Japanese infantry advanced in arc-shaped formation. Massing at every convenient point of shelter they soon reached the foot of the mountain, where the angle of the slope afforded protection. From a hill opposite I saw the steady and persistent move forward, now by twos and threes, now in long lines, as the Japanese crept from point to point.

"Then a heavy fusillade began. The Japanese tore off their coats in order to facilitate their movements, thus presenting splendid white marks to the enemy.

"The Japanese guns experienced difficulty at first in getting the range. Soon, however, smoke and flame showed where the opposing batteries were working ruin.

"Two Japanese mountain guns, greatly daring, advanced on the right below the Russian front, concealing themselves in the corn. Their fire in the midst of the Russian trenches caused the Russian fire momentarily to waver. Then it was renewed more vigorously than ever, but it was the beginning of the end.

"Some Japanese crept around, and, wriggling through the corn, burst unexpectedly on the trenches. There was a bloody fight. Then, as though by magic, white flags with blood-red centres appeared all up the mountain sides. On the summit stood men waving the flag of the Rising Sun aloft, and standard bearers were tearing up the slope, eager that their companies should have the honor of reaching the summit first.

"The Japanese now opened fire upon the Russians descending the opposite slopes, while the Russian artillery turned savagely upon the heights whence the Russians had been ousted.

"The Japanese losses were very heavy. The Russian artillery covered the retreat. Both armies remained in touch during the afternoon. A heavy thunderstorm ensued, during which the artillery of our left wing attacked Daiden-Tsu.

"There was little shelter that night for the wounded, and all lay in common fellowship upon mud, drenched to the skin. The pitiless rain continued until nearly midday, when a thick fog arose.

"When the fog lifted at 3:30 in the afternoon the Russians were observed in full retreat, pouring toward the bridge over the River Jang."

BATTLE AT PORT ARTHUR.

Firing Heard at Che-Foo Last Evening—The Operations Last Week.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 7, (10:30 P. M.)—Firing was heard here indistinctly this evening.

It is now apparent that the heavy fighting reported by numerous Chinese refugees as having occurred before Port Arthur between Aug. 27 and 31 was chiefly on Aug. 27 and 28, the Japanese thereafter directing their efforts almost entirely to holding the positions they had obtained. That these positions were of considerable importance is evidenced by the fact that the Russians risked the lives of men in open fight in their efforts to dislodge the Japanese.

As has been previously reported in these dispatches, the Japanese troops retired from nearly all points on the night of Aug. 31.

The Port Arthur Novy Krai on Aug. 31 published detached incidents of the fighting of Aug. 29 and 30 on the Russian east flank.

On the evening of the 29th the Japanese opened a heavy fire from Fort No. 3 and other points, directing their larger guns chiefly at the Russian positions on a hill called the Small Eagle's Nest.

At Shinshi-Yen the Japanese removed the roofs from a number of Chinese houses, strongly constructed of mud and stone, and converted them into excellent redoubts.

At 9 o'clock on the evening of the 29th a Russian regiment made a sudden onslaught on the Japanese trenches, and at the point of the bayonet the Japanese were forced to Redoubt No. 2. The Russians were unable to proceed further than this redoubt, because of the fierce fire poured upon them by the Japanese. According to the Novy Krai this redoubt had evidently been greatly strengthened during the previous night.

RUSSIANS PRAISE KUROPATKIN.

Newspapers Now Take a More Cheerful View of the Situation.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 7.—As the Russian newspapers begin to realize more fully the catastrophe which Gen. Kuropatkin avoided at Liao-Yang and the skilful manner in which he upset Field Marshal Oyama's plan to surround the Russian Army, they take a more cheerful view of the result and are beginning to bestow great praise upon Kuropatkin.

It is now apparent that Oyama's purpose in pressing the Russian position in front of Liao-Yang was to hold Kuropatkin's attention while the Japanese right wing was thrust around the Russian rear to block the Russian line of retreat. But Kuropatkin, at its inception, had his eye upon this flanking movement, and countered by the early withdrawal of his main army to the right bank of the Tai-Tse River, changing his front to meet and hold Gen. Kuroki in check while Gen. Zaroubaieff's corps at Liao-Yang crossed, burning the bridges behind him and placing the river between him and Gen. Oku.

Both the Russan and Japanese accounts seem to agree in saying that until the withdrawal of the main Russian Army from Liao-Yang began Kuropatkin had beaten off the Japanese assaults in front of Liao-Yang, and that the Russian Commander in Chief's first movement against Kuroki was also measurably successful.

While not underestimating the difficulties attending the retirement of the army northward and the continued threat from Oyama's right, the Novoye Vremya evidently considers that the task has already practically been successfully accomplished.

The Novosti says that, as the views of English, French, and German military critics are by no means unfavorable, "there exists no reasons why we should give way to despair over a defeat which never took place."

The Invalid Russ, the army organ, also continues to maintain that Oyama met with strategical defeat, but it expresses the opinion that Oyama has not yet given up hope of flanking Kuropatkin, for which he is strengthening Kuroki and diminishing the pressure against the Russian rear.

The Novoe Vremya, reviewing the situation, declares emphatically that neither mediation nor peace is now even thought of.

CHINESE MENACE RUSSIANS.

Japanese Advance Having Effect—Uproar and Confusion Everywhere.

MUKDEN, Sept. 7.—A correspondent has just arrived here after a journey of 120 miles from Sin-tsin-Tin, (east of Mukden,) and says that during the latter part of his journey he could hear the firing in the battle at Liao-Yang. The correspondent says:

"The whole country is aflame with the wildest and most contradictory rumors.

"The principal interest in the situation is in the fact that the Chinese population is becoming more anti-Russian with the advance of the Japanese army.

"Mukden itself is overcrowded, and it is almost impossible to get food or a place to sleep.

"Everywhere there is the greatest uproar and confusion, and many families are leaving in the direction of Harbin. The soldiers, however, are not at all disheartened at the result of the fight, and they say that the Japanese losses are so tremendous as seriously to weaken them. They declare that they have made the Japanese pay infinitely more for Liao-Yang than it was worth.

"I visited M. Kiriloff, one of The Associated Press Russian correspondents, who was shot through the lungs in the attack on Gen. Stakelberg's corps southwest of Liao-Yang on Aug. 30. He is in the Russo-Dutch Hospital, and the doctors say that he is not yet out of danger. M. Kiriloff, however, declares he will soon be back in harness."

SAYS KAISER MIGHT END WAR.

M. de Lanessan Wants Either Germany or America to Attempt Mediation.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—M. de Lanessan repeats the appeal for mediation between Russia and Japan by one or the other of the powers which was previously made by himself and Jean Dupuy, another ex-Minister of the Waldeck-Rousseau Cabinet.

He no longer suggests that France and England should take direct action, but says they should support any initiative taken. He seems to think the initiative might be taken with a greater chance of success by the United States or Germany—by Germany better even than by the United States.

The question whether the German Emperor would assume the task of mediator would, in M. de Lanessan's opinion, depend on the attitude of France and England. He says if those countries cannot intervene directly, at least it is possible for them to prompt the action of a mediator who would have a better chance of being heard by the belligerents.

The Débats, discussing M. de Lanessan's proposition, considers it the duty of the French Government to avoid compromising by premature zeal a démarche which perhaps may prove more timely at a later stage.

FASSETT TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN

Accepts Place After Woodruff and Black Had Declined It.

Gov. Odell announced yesterday that J. Sloat Fassett of Elmira would be the temporary Chairman of the Republican State Convention. The place was first offered to Timothy L. Woodruff. He accepted it, but after writing his speech he concluded that serving as temporary Chairman might interfere with his Gubernatorial aspirations and withdrew. The place was then offered to ex-Gov. Black, who declined it. Senator Platt suggested Mr. Fassett.

It developed yesterday that several Brooklyn leaders had assured Gov. Odell that, despite the action of the Brooklyn organization in declaring for Woodruff, they would be for whatever candidate Gov. Odell designated. This treachery in their camp is giving the Woodruff men some concern. There was no change in the Gubernatorial situation yesterday. Gov. Odell continued to assert that he had no candidate, and his friends were equally emphatic in declaring that the Governor-Chairman was certain to choose Lieut. Gov. Higgins. Gov. Odell and some of the local leaders will leave for Saratoga Saturday. Senator Platt is not going up until Monday.

Senator Malby, who is to be the permanent Chairman of the convention, said yesterday that President Roosevelt was certain to run ahead of the State ticket.

"I know of a number of Democratic business men up my way," said he, "who are declaring for Roosevelt because they are with the Republicans on the tariff issue, but they will vote against the Republican State ticket."

No Contests at Conventions To-night.

Both Democratic and Republican District Assembly Conventions, to select delegates to the State Conventions, will be held to-night. At the headquarters of the Republican County Committee and at Tammany Hall it was said there would be no contests. The Democrats and Republicans of New York County are adopting the same tactics with respect to the Gubernatorial nomination. Both will send uninstructed delegations to Saratoga.

VIEW PARK SUICIDE'S BODY.

Two Women Go to Morgue in Carriage with Crest.

The mystery that has been made as to the identity of the young woman who committed suicide in Central Park last Friday, and whose body has not been publicly identified yet, although several men and women have seen and apparently recognized it, was not cleared up yesterday, although two women saw the body and apparently identified it.

Their arrival at the Morgue, where a majority of the visitors are poor, created a sensation. They were driven there in a handsome carriage. Two men were on the box. On the door was a shield in black, green, and gold, with a unicorn above. In each corner of the shield was a fleur-de-lis, and in the centre were entwined the initials "L. B. R.," which were also on the harness.

Both of the women were expensively dressed. The elder wore black silk with a long black veil over her face and white hair. She was assisted in alighting from the carriage by her companion, who was a woman of about thirty years. The younger woman was also in black.

When the two women had seen the body of the suicide they recoiled and the elder had to be supported.

MAMMAS CALL OFF STRIKE.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—A strike of upward of 200 school children was declared at the Longfellow School to-day because the Principal had been transferred since the close of the last term. The children said they would not go to school until the teacher came back.

They reckoned without the leaders, in this case their mammas, for after a conference between them and the new Principal the strike was declared off and the youngsters went back to their books and slates.

Arrested on Charge of Grand Larceny.

De Witt C. Kapal of 1,662 Lexington Avenue, was arrested last night by the police of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station, on a warrant issued by Magistrate Baker on complaint of Annie Krupa of 416 East One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, charging grand larceny. Justice Zeller admitted Kapal to bail. The police have no knowledge of the facts in the case.

LONG ROYAL FEUD IS LIKELY TO END

Kaiser and Duke of Cumberland May Bury the Hatchet.

THRONE FOR THE DUKE'S SON

It Is Said He Will Be Made Ruler of Brunswick—Credit Will Be Due to Emperor.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Recent events, such as the engagement of the Crown Prince and the marked attention shown by Emperor William to the young Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, are indications that the long-existing feud between the Hohenzollerns and the house of Cumberland is coming to an end.

I learn to-day that additional steps in this direction will soon become known. Prince William, eldest son of the Duke of Cumberland, will, it is asserted, become the ruler of Brunswick. The Regent of that State is becoming old, and a well-informed personage tells me that he is desirous of retiring.

If the feud between the Kaiser and the Duke of Cumberland is ended the credit will be due to the Emperor, who will have made peace with the Duke after more than one rebuff.

The quarrel is an old one. The Duke of Cumberland is the son of George V., the dethroned King of Hanover, who died in 1878. When the last Duke of Brunswick died in 1884 leaving no children, the Duke of Cumberland became the heir, but, as he declined to recognize the new Constitution of the German Empire, the Imperial Government declined to allow the succession to take place, and an interregnum began which has lasted ever since. The Duke refused to entertain any overtures toward a settlement unless his claim to the Kingdom of Hanover were allowed.

The Regent of Brunswick is Prince Albert, a nephew of Emperor William I., who was elected Regent of the Duchy by its Diet in 1885.

Last year when Emperor William visited Copenhagen there was talk of an approaching settlement of the quarrel. The Duke of Cumberland was at the Danish capital just before the Emperor arrived there, and it was generally believed a marriage would be arranged between one of the Duke's daughters and the German Crown Prince. The Duke, however, left Copenhagen just before the Emperor arrived, and this act was regarded as a direct rebuff to the Kaiser.

A short time ago a daughter of the Duke married the young Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

PLEHVE'S SUCCESSOR CHOSEN.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 7.—Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky, Governor General of Vilna, has been selected to succeed the late M. de Plehve as Minister of the Interior.

The Prince, in receiving the congratulations of his friends on his appointment, said it had been signed this afternoon and that probably it would be officially promulgated to-morrow morning. Possibly, however, it will not be announced until the Prince returns next week from Vilna, whither he departed this evening.

The Emperor summoned Prince Sviatopolk-Mirsky and had a long interview with him at Peterhof to-day.

The Prince is a military officer of the rank of General. Formerly he was Governor of Penza and Ekaterinoslaff, and he occupied the post of Chief of the Gendarmerie and Assistant Minister of the Interior under the late M. Sipiaguine, (who preceded M. de Plehve and was assassinated April 16, 1902.) He is forty-seven years old and is considered to be an able man.

He has not been identified with harsh measures and his appointment will probably be hailed as the inauguration of a mild régime.

URUGUAYAN REBELS ROUTED.

Said to Have Lost 1,200 Men—Government Troops Suffer Heavily.

"On joining the northern division of the army we attacked the revolutionary forces, which were well armed and equipped and supplied with artillery. Notwithstanding this we forced them, after severe fighting, to retire into Brazilian territory.

"Added to this splendid triumph the northern division succeeded in placing out of action Gen. Saravia and other rebel leaders. I estimate the casualties of the revolutionists in killed and wounded at 170 officers and over 600 men, they leaving in our camp alone 130 dead. I am informed that the rebels estimate their losses at 1,200.

"The Government casualities were: Officers, 11 killed and 53 wounded; men, 83 killed, 345 wounded, and 34 missing.

"I have limited this dispatch to actual occurrences, without reference to the transcendental importance of the military operation."

TOOK ACID IN SYRINGE.

Doubting his ability to swallow a fatal dose of carbolic acid, Louis D. Levy, fifty-four years old, of 57 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, put the poison in a syringe and forced it down his throat last evening in the saloon at 902 Columbus Avenue. After taking a drink he entered the toilet room and then staggered back into the barroom, sitting down at a table. He died in a few minutes.

Levy was formerly in the clothing business at 625 Broadway as a member of the firm of Cohn & Levy, but at the time of his death was an agent for a life insurance company. He left his boarding house yesterday morning to attend the funeral services of Dr. Baar of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, and nothing was known of his movements afterward until he died in the saloon. The police notified his widow and two children, who had just returned from the country. Mrs. Levy knew no cause, she said, for her husband's act.

15,000 ARMENIANS STARVING.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The American Consul at Harput has reported to the State Department that he has visited Bitlis and is now in Mush.

The Consul states that the district of Sassun is now tranquil. The survivors of the massacre are in a destitute condition, but are attempting to rebuild their burned villages with a little Government aid.

The Consular Corps at Bitlis estimates the number massacred and dead from exposure and hunger, &c., as 3,500.

About 15,000 persons have lost everything and are starving, many being ill and wounded. Small contributions toward their relief have been received through the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at Bitlis, but much more is urgently needed, the conditions being similar to those in Macedonia last year.

glory. The Republican leaders had come to be men trained to do Roosevelt's bidding, and, while it was fortunate that they had failed to have their own way to the extent of making the South a Poland or an Ireland, yet they had produced higher taxes and new sectional strifes.

Never before, he urged, was there a time when a transfer of rule from one party to another could be accomplished with so little disturbance of conditions in the country. The money of the land was safe. It was time to realize that the tariff was a hindrance, and not a help, to our industries.

"Where is the danger? My eminent and resourceful friend, the late Secretary of War, finds it in the advanced age of our candidate for Vice President. Further, Mr. Root says that if Parker is elected he'll appoint Hill Secretary of State. Davis may die. A Guiteau or a Czolgosz then may remove President Parker. Then, then, then Hill will be President!

Cheers for Hill.

"But Mr. Root is all wrong," added Col. Watterson. "Hill now says he won't be Secretary of State. I always knew Mr. Hill hated the Republicans, but never before did I know the intensity of his hatred."

There were shouts of "Hurrah for Hill!"

Col. Watterson closed his speech soon after that by saying:

"And having that faith [in the people] I am confident they will take no chance on the would-be man on horseback or the party already too well in the saddle. A new Tilden has arisen—a new Tilden, and fittingly in this great Empire State of New York—a very tribune of the people, calm, resolute, and dignified; the very antithesis of Theodore Roosevelt. And as sure as Samuel Tilden was elected, I believe he will be elected, and when he is elected he will be inaugurated and will take his seat—and all will be well."

Col. Johnson next read a letter from Joseph Pulitzer, in which he said he expected to see Parker elected if no vital campaign mistakes were made. Mr. Pulitzer said that the campaign wasn't going to be fought out in Vermont, but "in New York, the Empire State, whose habit it is to vote independently; in the rich and populous industrial cities of Connecticut and New Jersey; on the wide plains and in the busy marts of Indiana, Wisconsin, and Illinois, and in the doubtful States of the farther West."

Mr. Pulitzer's Letter.

The letter continued in part:

"The result of the Vermont election makes it, in my judgment, all the more imperative that Judge Parker shall realize and perform his duty to the millions of honest voters who seek no office, look for no personal gain in this election; but who see in him an ideal and a hope, and aspire to preserve through him the institutions they love.

"It is the part of a leader to lead. I earnestly beg of you when you see him tomorrow at Esopus to urge that he accept also the full responsibilities of his position; that he will not permit the campaign in New York—the pivotal State—to be mismanaged by the small politicians who beset him; that he will in the next sixty days be even more than ever the people's leader and teacher, their tribune and advocate."

Herman Ridder, editor of the Staats-Zeitung, explained to the editors from the different parts of the land "why independents support Parker and Davis." He said that independents could not be deceived by the digging up of dead issues, or the injection of fictitious issues.

They went about voting as a business proposition, looking calmly and dispassionately into the claims of the rival parties and the rival candidates and casting their ballots for the man who would, they believe, best serve the country.

"The independent voters," he said, "want a man who will not upset things. We may be called weaklings, but our vote will decide the election in November, and we look to the country first and the party afterward. We therefore stand, in this campaign, for Parker and Davis, as against Roosevelt and Fairbanks. Roosevelt is erratic, meddlesome, and spectacular. That he is recognized as unsafe even by the Republican leaders is shown by the fact that he has been muzzled by the managers of his own campaign.

"Judge Parker, on the contrary, is the embodiment of the ideas cherished by the Independent voters of the Nation. Clear-headed and evenly balanced, he can be relied upon to steer the destinies of the country safely.

"The country needs a safe man. The war spirit is abroad on the face of the earth, and a Rough Rider might want to get into the game. Roosevelt stands for personality and theorism, Judge Parker for law and order and constitutional government."

"Roosevelt the Wrecker."

Clark Howell, editor of The Atlanta Constitution and President of the upper house of the Georgia Legislature spoke to the subject, "Democratic Success the Surest Guarantee of National Unity." Mr. Howell was cheered to the echo.

"The Republican Party," he declared, "is the great wrecker of sectional harmony and National unity. President Roosevelt lifted the lid of the racial Pandora's box that the people, black and white alike, might be attacked by the devils which emerged therefrom.

"I am speaking the sentiment of the New South when I tell you that the attitude of the Administration for the past few years has done more to retard the progress of the negro race than all else that has been done since the civil war.

"The persistent disregard of the President for the advice of even his own referees in Southern States in the matter of Federal appointments has rekindled racial feeling. His acts might have been justified had they been necessary, but they were not. Let all those who believe that there is excuse for the stand he has taken invoke the memory of the martyred McKinley and recall the picture of the whole country kneeling at his bedside and praying that he might be spared.

"McKinley was the President of every State in the United States, in his every word and act President of the common country. He contributed immeasurably to the spirit of National unity. Under his Administration it was possible for Southern white men to join their lot with the Republican Party and retain their self-respect.

"Even as Democrats we hoped and believed that the time had come when we could, as good citizens, range ourselves with either party without sacrificing our manhood upon the altar of illiteracy and racial disturbances.

"We would deny the negro no single privilege which he might enjoy. We but ask to be allowed to seek the co-operation of its better element in an effort to uplift the race, free from the evil influence of those political chestnut-pullers who would not have us prove our friendship for the negro. It would be best for the whites, best for the negroes, and best for the country at large.

"The representative men of the South repudiate mob violence, just as do the best men of the West and North. Eliminate the racial question, and you place the capstone upon the structure of National unity, and the men of all States can then divide as they see fit on National issues, rationally and without fear of harmful result."

John B. Stoll of Indiana, a South Bend editor, told "Why We Want to Get In." If, he said, the only reason to be advanced was that Democrats were out and the other fellows in, there would be no basis for an appeal to the country. He then proceeded to enumerate the reasons for wishing a change in the political complexion of the Nation. Many were the reasons he gave. He was heartily applauded when he had concluded.

Andrew McLean of Brooklyn, editor of The Brooklyn Citizen, delivered the last address. His subject was "The Democrats of the Empire State." He heartily indorsed the prophecy of victory voiced by Col. Watterson, and recalled past Democratic successes in New York. He recalled the address of Mr. Ridder and the reasons he had given for the support of Parker and Davis by the independent voters of New York.

"Dissect those reasons," he said, "and you will find that every argument advanced by him were the arguments which won the State for Tilden, Horatio Seymour, and Grover Cleveland.

"The Democratic Party in New York, despite all reports to the contrary, presents a united front, and will see that the State goes into the Democratic columns in November. Even Cortelyou, that master-optimist, ranks New York as a doubtful State. You all know what that means.

"Be on your guard. Be not deceived. Remember the attacks upon ex-Senator David B. Hill. I am not here to defend Senator Hill, but I want to say to you, as a Democrat, that if he had not been a formidable force for Democracy, he would not have been singled out for attack by the opposing party. Do not be misled, either, by the tales of discord in New York City.

"We have entered into no campaign since that in which Cleveland was elected, with such bright promise of success. If victory does not come to us, it will be because of something which is unforeseen. If the people, press, and party managers do their duty, there can be no doubt as to the result in New York, and, with the Empire State will go the election. A victory will be achieved for peace and liberty, not for war and glory."

EDITORS HAVE BUSY DAY.

See Democratic Leaders, Ride in Subway, and Hold Meeting.

The Democratic editors flocked into Democratic National Headquarters yesterday to see the campaign managers. Headquarters for the visitors were established in the Waldorf-Astoria, where National Committeeman Josephus Daniels of North Carolina, who is an editor himself and who acted as Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements for the conference, was on hand to greet them all. Chairman Taggart, Secretary Woodson, and other officials of the National Committee gave up practically the entire day to the editors, and to-day will accompany them on the trip to Esopus to meet Judge Parker. The party will go by New York Central to Hyde Park, and then by boat to Esopus, returning all the way by boat. To-night the entire party will be the guests of the management of Dreamland at Coney Island.

A hundred of the editors took advantage of an invitation extended by August Belmont and made a trip through the subway. Two trains were utilized, one of five and the other of three cars.

In the afternoon the Democratic State Editorial Association met at the Hoffman House. Daniel D. Frisbie of The Schoharie Democrat-Republican was elected President; A. W. Kessinger of The Rome Sentinel Treasurer; John Underhill of The Warsaw Times Secretary, and Luke McHenry of The Chittenango Times Chairman of the Executive Committee. Resolutions were adopted indorsing Prof. Duncan C. Lee of Cornell for a place on the State ticket. He is a candidate for Lieutenant Governor.

Fall Top Coats for Men.

Ready-for-Service.

So that the power of intelligent selection may arrive at its object, we present nine distinctive box models (four short and five long,) in more than seventy styles of foreign and domestic fabrics such as coverts, whipcords, twills, vicunas, cheviots, thibets, unshorn worsteds and tweeds. Of paddocks and paletots there are five distinctive models embracing twenty-eight different designs and three tourist models in sixteen styles of fabrics. Does that not grant us the right to term our collection "representative and comprehensive"? The prices range from $12.50 to $35. Even though you be inclined to pay a third more, we do not know of a tailorman who can fashion a coat to express more character, more distinctiveness or more of that indefinable something termed "style" than that which marks a Saks coat, be the price ever so modest.

Worthy of Special Mention

Do we consider our 40-inch box coat of vicuna, in Oxford or black, lined throughout with silk and with silk-faced lapels, which, to our mind, is exceptionally good value At $15.00

Waggaman Admits Bankruptcy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—An amended answer to the rule issued in the Waggaman case wis filed to-day by Waggaman's counsel. This answer, it is said, is necessary because of some misapprehension of the meaning intended to be conveyed by the original. In it it is admitted by the respondent that he is unable to pay his debts and that he is willing to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground. He further declares that he intended to convey this in his original answer. The answer of the Catholic University will be presented to the court to-morrow by its counsel, Charles K. Bonaparte.

GEN. BELL'S NARROW ESCAPE FROM CAPTURE

Surprised by Blues While Talking to Mrs. Corbin and Mrs. Grant.

BOTH SIDES CLAIM VICTORY

Militia Worn Out by Hard Work at Manoeuvres — Trooper Shot and Wounded with Blank Cartridge.

Special to The New York Times.

GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 7.—The third battle of Bull Run, which began yesterday and ended to-day, offered almost everything in the way of military science except a decision. There were in this hypothetical battle the forced marches, the attempts to turn the enemy's flank, the hammering at his centre, and all the tactical movements which in battles of bullets cost the lives of many men. Incidentally it nearly resulted in the capture by surprise of the Commander in Chief of the Blues under circumstances which would have been particularly mortifying to him.

The chief umpire, Col. Wagner, gave the relative positions of the attacking Blue Army and the defending Brown forces, but he made no decisive announcement as to the result. Neither did he announce the fact that one reason for the suppression of this usual detail of military encounters was the fear that it was calculated to cause unnecessary rivalry not free from jealousy among the opposing officers.

Gen. Grant and Gen. Bell, however, are hostile only theoretically, and both Blue and Brown commanders this afternoon received congratulations from officers who knew that each had won the constructive victory.

As a matter of fact the final advantage seemed to be with Gen. Grant and the Blue army, for it succeeded in penetrating the Brown centre, which defended Thoroughfare Gap, the opening through the Bull Run range which by the terms of the problem the Brown army was assigned to defend. The success or failure of the operation, however, was rendered doubtful because Brown imaginary reinforcements arrived just at that moment. Both sides, moreover, had comparatively fresh brigades that might have turned the tide.

A final decision was rendered even more difficult by the fact that at this crucial moment of manoeuvring, which was at noon, Gen. Corbin, in supreme command, ordered a cessation of hostilities. His reason for this was the condition of many of the militia troops, who were worn out by the hard work, and have to be in the field for another battle to-day, although the resumption of hostilities has been postponed until 9 o'clock in the morning.

BELL HOUSE CENTRE OF STRUGGLE.

The point about which the issue hinged and about which the fiercest fighting waged was at Bell House, near the Antioch Road, about one and one-half miles north of Thoroughfare and the same distance west of the Bull Run Mountains. Here Gen. Grant concentrated his attack against the brigade of Col. Regan, defending the Brown line, and Gen. Bell anticipated this movement in so far that he made dispositions to meet it.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock Gen. Wint, with his brigade of Blues, attacked Col. Regan in force. His artillery numbered sixteen guns, and the assault was made with great vigor; but, as the Blues made their advance over open ground against a well-posted and strong Brown line, the umpires ruled the Blues defeated.

It was not discovered, however, until later that the Browns, while meeting the Blue attack, had been under a constructive shrapnel fire from the guns and Chief Umpire Col. Wagner said last night that had that fact been known in time the decision might have been different. When the attack at this point was finally resumed a battalion of engineers and a battalion of infantry belonging to the Blues advanced, but the infantry was ruled out because it came under a theoretical enfiladed fire from the Browns and the engineers were retired because they went out of bounds.

Gen. Lee, with his Brown brigade in reserve, had rallied to the support of Regan, but he withdrew and hurried to the centre at Lesser's, to the south, to support the line. Two battalions of the defending Browns, forming at right angles, were there attacked vigorously by Wint, who had been reinforced by Col. Price's brigade.

The firing was very heavy, and when a decision was called for the Brown umpire and the Blue umpire could not agree. The Blues claimed a sudden and heavy rifle attack on the Brown line which was not returned for some minutes. The chief umpire, to whom the question was appealed, decided for the Blues.

On account of this theoretical success of the Blues, Gen. Wint was figured as having broken through the Brown line, giving Gen. Grant the most important advantage of the day. The constructive hole was made at the part of the Brown line held by the Second New York, one of the strongest and finest regiments in camp.

That piercing the enemy's line does not always result in victory is exemplified by the fact that on this same field, in a real battle of Bull Run, Stonewall Jackson, defending a railway cut, was attacked by Kearny, and his line broken, but Jackson's reinforcements, which came up under Hill, were able to drive back Kearny and restore original conditions. The same thing was shown with Grant, in Tennessee. Gen. Schofield and Pickett's famous charge is another example.

BEGINNING OF THE BATTLE.

When hostilities were suspended at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the theoretical sunset, Gen. Bell's successful forces had established a line extending from Broad Run on the south, northeasterly along the Carolina Road for two miles; then easterly almost to the Warrenton turnpike, and thence north parallel with the Carolina Road to the northern end of the war map. Activities were resumed at midnight, and the Brown commander, to strengthen his position, drew back almost two miles and greatly contracted his battle front.

His right rested on Buckland, and his line went thence through Thoroughfare and north of Antioch, which rests under the shadow of the Bull Run Mountains. Gen. Barry with the Second Brigade, in which is the Twelfth of New York, held the line from Buckland to Thoroughfare; the Third Brigade, under Col. Regan, occupied his former line of outposts north of Thoroughfare, keeping two regiments in reserve in the rear of his left flank, and Col. Smith's Fourth Brigade, which saw much fighting yesterday, held the line in force from the left of the Third Brigade to Antioch. The main reserve, consisting of Gen. Lee's command, the First Brigade, took up a position near Thoroughfare in readiness for emergency.

The purpose of the Brown commander in falling back upon his own camp was not done altogether to concentrate his line, although that was his chief object. When the fighting ended to-day, the Blue Army had advanced to the Thoroughfare railroad station, as had been expected, while the Browns were in force directly in front of their own camp. The Blues, therefore, were obliged to march back in the hot sun this afternoon over a long, rough, and dusty road to their camp at Manassas.

The results of this strategy will be that early to-morrow when the second problem will be fought out, a weary and footsore Blue Army will be obliged to advance to meet the attacking Browns, who had no marching at all to do this afternoon.

EARLY RETROGRADE MOVEMENT.

Ordered to withdraw from the positions won yesterday, the Browns began to fall back at 3 o'clock this morning, and at 9 o'clock were established along their new front, the locating of which caused the enemy some trouble. The Brown divisional cavalry, in which is Squadron A of New York and Troop C of Brooklyn, under Col. Morton, screened the retirement of the Brown forces and then fell back and concentrated by squadrons, one behind the left wing, one behind the centre, and one in the rear of the right wing.

The advance of the Blues, judged by military observers on the field, was remarkable for the speed with which the infantry and cavalry covered the distance from Manassas and established their attacking line ten miles from their camp. The Fifteenth Regiment of cavalry with the New York troops, Squadron A and Troop C, were at Buckland, facing the Brown right when the sun lighted up the sides of the mountains. A Blue patrol early in the morning was discovered in Thoroughfare Gap, behind the Brown lines and the strategic point which the Brown Army was defending. There was a Brown outpost there, however, which hypothetically surrounded and captured the venturesome Blues.

The Blue front was made up by Gen. Bliss's brigade on the left, the Fourth Brigade, under Gen. Frost of the Connecticut National Guard holding the left centre; Col. Butler D. Price, who did most of the fighting yesterday, in the right centre, and Gen. Wint holding the right wing. It was only the rules of the war which brought Gen. Wint into action today, for yesterday in actually exposing himself to a hiding Brown outpost he was theoretically killed by a bullet in the left shoulder.

According to the rules, however, the imaginary Blue reinforcements arrived today, and to make up the additional Blue strength, those killed and put out of action yesterday reappeared on the field to-day as fighting factors.

Gen. Bell himself was almost captured by the enemy. While moving his troops up to meet the strong Blue attack near the Antioch road, he encountered Mrs. Corbin and Mrs. Grant, who were watching the operations from a point of vantage. While he was talking to them, an advance guard of Blues suddenly broke cover behind him and were coming up. Two of the Brown commander's aides, Capt. Craig and Lieut. Hughes, saw the danger and they hurried up, and Capt. Craig seized him by the arm. Gen. Bell sized up the situation and decamped hastily.

SCENE OF HOT FIGHTING.

It was in this vicinity that the heaviest fighting of the day—that at the Bell House—occurred. There was hot fighting also in the immediate vicinity of the Thoroughfare Railroad Station. The First Tennessee and the First Florida of the Blue forces had advanced to the north of the tracks and took up a strong position on a hill only about 800 yards away from the Brown forces, which were posted south of the railroad tracks, with Capt. Foote and two guns to command the cut. At the left end of this line was Capt. Summerall and his battery, which included the Connecticut machine gun. At the right end was a force of the Ninth regulars, well intrenched. The Ninth men said that they had several times annihilated the Blue Southerners on the opposite hill by raking them with an enfilading fire.

The Seventh Cavalry of the Brown army again to-day was the most spectacularly active body in the battle, and to the Blues this crack horse was a real will-o'-the-wisp. Its general run of luck was broken this morning about 10:30, when Trooper Martin E. Williams was shot in the breast, not theoretically, but so seriously that he will have a long sojourn in the hospital.

The cavalry force was raiding the extreme left of the Blue line, and Williams, with another trooper, was in the yard of a farmhouse on the Carolina road on the North Fork of Bull Run. Scouts at the edge of the wood discovered them, and a large detachment of the First Tennessee set out to capture them. Private Herbert of Company L of this infantry ran around the house and bumped into Williams, who was trying to escape. Herbert was carrying his gun out before him, and the muzzle hit Williams in the chest, accidentally, it is thought. Herbert pulled the trigger, and the paraffine-tipped blank cartridge entered Williams's body.

CAVALRY'S JOKE ON INFANTRY.

Before that the crack cavalrymen had had considerable fun at the expense of the same Tennessee regiment and the First Floridas. A squad of eight members of Col. Nicholson's staff had picked out a thoroughly masked position along the Carolina road, and, discharging a volley at the infantrymen on the hill, they would gallop along a hundred yards or so and pop at them. They kept repeating the operation until the Blue men from Tennessee and Florida thought that they had a big force to contend with, and the two regiments poured volley after volley at the eight men whom they could not see.

The appearance of the Blues when they started out to march back from Thoroughfare to Manassas seemed to promise success for Gen. Bell's stratagem, for most of them were worn out, thirsty, and begrimed by dust, which covered their faces and filled their eyes. They jumped into passing wagons where they could, and tried all sorts of schemes to get down to Manassas without walking. Two or three hundred swarmed into a coal car and over the tender of a locomotive of a way train, and were transported in that way to the Manassas camp.

A notable exception among the returning Blues, as far as appearance was concerned, was the Fourteenth of Brooklyn, which marched back along the Thoroughfare Pike to Manassas. The faces of the Brooklyn boys were not shiny with soap, nor did their uniforms look as if they just had been brought in from the tailor's shop, but their line was excellent, and they covered the twelve miles erect and without sign of fatigue. Gen. Corbin, who at corps headquarters watched them pass, highly praised the showing they made after the hard day's marching, for altogether they covered about thirty miles.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt arrived here to-day. She will view the manoeuvres tomorrow from an auto as the guest of Mrs. Corbin.

G. R. SHELDON'S DAUGHTER WED; PARENTS ABSENT

Disparity in Ages of Couple Said to be Reason.

BRIDE 21, HUSBAND IS 40

Special to The New York Times.

GLEN COVE, L. I., Sept. 7.—New Yorkers who spend the Summer here were surprised to-day when the news of the wedding of Miss Mary Seney Sheldon, daughter of George R. Sheldon, the well-known financier, and William Fuller, a well-to-do clubman of New York, became public. A further surprise was furnished when it was learned that Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon had not attended the ceremony, which was performed at St. Paul's Church at 10:30 o'clock this morning, the Rev. J. M. Gammack officiating. Neither did they attend the wedding breakfast, which followed at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Guthrie at Locust Valley.

So far as could be learned there was no other objection to the match except the disparity in the ages of the couple, Miss Sheldon being only twenty-one years old, having entered society only a year ago, while Mr. Fuller is about forty years of age. Those who received cards to the wedding insisted that they had been sent out by the parents of the bride, but they admit that Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon were neither at the wedding nor the wedding breakfast. It is also said that an effort was made recently by the parents to induce Miss Sheldon to go to Europe, but without success. Shortly before the ceremony Mrs. Sheldon drove through town without meeting the bridal party.

Those who are known to have been present at the service and breakfast are Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sands Willard, Mrs. Willard being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie, and Mr. and Mrs. E. M. F. Miller, a distant relative of the Guthries. Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie are at present in Europe.

It was known that Mr. Fuller had been paying Miss Sheldon considerable attention, but it was not thought that the wedding would take place so soon. Mr. Fuller returned only on Saturday last from Europe, and Miss Sheldon is said to have met him at the pier. At that time, too, it was expected that Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie would arrive with Mr. Fuller, but he reached New York alone.

The bride was married in a traveling dress. Immediately afterward the couple were driven to the Guthrie residence, at Locust Valley, where breakfast was served, and left on the 2:30 o'clock train. It is said they will soon start for Europe.

Mr. Fuller is a member of the Metropolitan, Racquet, Union, and other clubs. He has spent much time recently at the Guthrie residence here.

Neither the Sheldons nor the friends of the couple would discuss the wedding. The Rev. Mr. Gammack was not at home to callers this evening. At the Sheldon residence no information was forthcoming, the butler, who answered the telephone, said none of the family was in.

Besides his connection in the financial world, Mr. Sheldon is well known in politics. His wife is a daughter of George R. Seney. The family residence is at 24 East Thirty-eighth Street, New York.

AMERICAN COTTON RECEIVER.

$7,000,000 Corporation Said to Owe $1,327,000 Besides Bonded Debt.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 7.—Chancellor Magie to-day appointed Charles E. Kimball of Summit, N. J., and William C. Lansing of Taunton, Mass., receivers for the American Cotton Company.

The application was made by Frederick Y. Robertson of New York, Vice President and Treasurer of the company, a creditor to the extent of $15,000, who in his petition states that the company's indebtedness, exclusive of $2,000,000 bonds, is $1,327,000, made up largely of bills payable, a great part of which are now overdue or about to mature. On Oct. 1 $50,000 interest on the company's bonded indebtedness will become due, and there are now pending against the company five suits for different amounts aggregating $25,000. A rule was made returnable on Oct. 4, when cause may be shown why the appointment of the receivers should not be made permanent.

The American Cotton Company was organized in 1896 with a capital stock of $7,000,000. It acquired various properties for the development of the "round-bale" process, including an extensive foundry plant in Chicago. The company, like various others of its generation, exhausted its "working capital," and for some time past a reorganization committee has been at work trying to straighten things out. A few weeks ago a reorganization plan was announced under which the mortgage indebtedness was to be increased by $1,500,000 to provide new "working capital," and the creditors were to take new first preferred stock for their claims.

At that time William Nelson Cromwell, who gave out the reorganization plan, did not mention the prospective default of October interest. The reorganization plan was still in abeyance when the receivership suit was begun, but Mr. Cromwell said last night that the action was a friendly one, taken to secure the interests of all concerned. He said that the reorganization committee held more than a majority of all bonds, notes, and stock.

Convention for Queens and Nassau.

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 7.—The Republican Assembly District Convention for the Third Assembly District of Queens and Nassau met this afternoon. Delegates to the State Convention were chosen, and a resolution adopted indorsing the administration of President Roosevelt. The delegates elected to the Congressional Convention caucused, and decided to support William W. Cocks for the nomination.

NEW YORK WOMAN DISAPPEARS

Had Gone to Buffalo to Visit Relatives—Hinted at Suicide.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, Sept. 7.—Mrs. Henrietta Davidson, sixty-three years old, disappeared from the home of relatives on Niagara Street on Labor Day. She had come to Buffalo from New York the day before. The relatives had just returned to town from the West, and the visit of Mrs. Davidson was unexpected. She talked incoherently, and the next morning she dressed hurriedly and said she must go back to New York. She left the house ostensibly for the railroad station.

Tuesday morning the relatives received a letter posted in Buffalo from Mrs. Davidson. In it she asked that some of her things be sent to her daughter, and hinted at suicide. The police were notified. The relatives do not seem to know much about Mrs. Davidson except that she had a Summer home at Long Branch and was prominent in Presbyterian Church circles in New York.

CARUSO A FATHER NOW.

Italian Tenor Cables Manager Conried That Son Has Arrived.

Heinrich Conried got a cablegram from the tenor, Enrico Caruso, yesterday announcing that the singer had become the proud father of a son. Mme. Caruso is doing well.

Mr. Conried wired back congratulations, and suggested that young Caruso be brought along to this country when his father comes next month.

Reward for Daley's Slayer.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 7.—North Tarrytown has offered $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderers of George Daley, who was hacked to pieces early Tuesday morning, and whose body was found in his carriage on Beekman Avenue. From the time Daley was last seen alive until his body was found only fifteen minutes had elapsed.

THERE are so many new ideas in the tailor-made suits this Fall that one is at a loss to know just what to choose. We say, however, do as most of the admittedly smart dressers are doing—choose the style that's most becoming to you and don't go to extremes unless your figure is particularly adapted for such a suit. The total absence of any creation that is not up to the minute in style simplifies your choosing at this store and assures you a stylish and becoming suit or coat. Fifth Floor.

There's the new blouse suit—the short, medium and long coat suits—but no matter which you choose, it must have the new vest effect in order to be correct.

We do not think there's a store in all New York where you can choose from such a variety—and you can depend upon it that whatever we show is an approved style or it would not be here. We've built up one of the largest suit and coat businesses in America by offering smart dresses, exclusive styles—devoid of the traditional factory marks—garments that possess a charming individuality so conspicuously lacking in suits and coats shown elsewhere. We aim to insure that made-to-your-measure appearance which all women admire.

Women's suits—all the smart Autumn styles, highest class materials in these suits, you would expect to find only in much higher priced garments. The styles show distinctions of all the novel features of the newest production in 22, 27, 36 and 42 inch length coats. The skirts also embrace several new effects at prices ranging

$16.50, $19.50, $25, $29.50, $37.50 and $45

Women's coats—Many new arrivals in fine tailor-made covert coats in 22 to 27 inch top coats, also 42 and 45 inch tourist coats, that are distinct novelties for this season, at $12.50, $18.00, $25.00, $29.50, $35.00

Women's storm coats, grand display of strictly waterproof garments. This season has brought out for this "Popular Garment" some extremely novel styles and effects that make the coat such a favorite. It's the most practical garment you can purchase. We have them at $10.00, $14.75, $18.50, $24.75 and $29.50

Third Floor.

$22.50 for misses' pedestrian suits made of all wool cheviot, box-pleated coat, three-quarter length, trimmed with contrasting collar, cloth and braid. Broad side-pleated skirt, black and blue; sizes 14, 16, 18.

$17.50 for junior suits in all wool fancy mixtures, double breasted Norfolk jacket, fancy collar and cuffs, lined throughout with satin; kilted skirt, in blue, brown, gray; sizes 14, 16.

$14.75 for junior suits in all wool cheviots, box coats, new pleated back, flat stitched collar, handsomely trimmed, cachon cloth and braid; skirt side pleated; sizes 14, 16.

$13.50 for misses' tourist coats in fine quality covert cloth, flat collar, inlaid with panne velvet; belted back, body and sleeves lined with taffeta; sizes 14, 16, 18.

$4.75 for misses' pedestrian skirts, 21 gore, side pleated, well tailored, in brown, blue or black cheviot; 33 to 40 lengths.

$9.75 for misses' cravenette coats, all season garments, in Oxford, tan and olive; belt all around; very stylish; sizes 12 to 18.

DAME Fashion limits one's choice to a few ideas this season; and you must choose according to her whim or you'll be disappointed when you see how universally smart dressers are going to observe her dictates. Main Floor.

You cannot make any mistake if you choose your material here for the new Fall frock. We've chosen wisely for you, and you can depend upon it that every yard of new Fall goods we have in stock is critically correct.

Here's an interesting feature—we buy our foreign fabrics direct and eliminate all middle profits—and what we save goes to you. That's why our prices are so low—why we enjoy such a large dress goods trade. Here's an inkling of what to wear and what to pay.

MY! what a crowd we had Tuesday for these high quality, fashionable silk lace dress nets, and the smart dressers who came couldn't find a single yard worth less than $1.25, but found hundreds worth $2.50. We've hundreds more left for to-day at the same extraordinary bargain price—59c. Would have sold every yard in a day if we'd had selling space to devote to these dress nets.

We secured 5,000 yards of the very finest silk lace dress nets from the leading manufacturer of Calais, France, at one-quarter to one-half the regular price to importers. While this magnificent lot fixes the price is 59c. 59c

We've made the price uniform so there will be an extra incentive for you to make your selection early and secure the $2.50 nets. Could just as easily have 75c. or $1 for them. They are what the manufacturer had left after filling his season's orders from American importers. Otherwise he wouldn't have accepted so little for them.

There are plain Tosca meshes, square meshes, Chantilly figures, filet meshes, large dots, small dots, squares, cubes, conventional design, geometrical figures, &c.—the daintiest and newest effects for fashionable Autumn wear. They come in all black, all white, champagne, ivory and cream.

Here's a hint to fashionable dressers—Lace Dress Nets will be much in demand this season for the new pleated, shirred and tucked waists and costumes. The price—59c.—is of greatest concern to dressmakers and milliners. Come to-day—we've only 5,000 yards.

HAND IN HOPPER'S POCKET.

Which Hopper Grabbed—It Was Graham's, Who Later Denied Ownership.

As John P. Hopper, a Mount Vernon commuter, was going up to the ticket window in the Grand Central Station last night, he felt some one push against him and at the same moment became aware that somebody's hand was in his hip pocket, where he carries his wallet.

So Hopper grabbed the hand, which proved to be that of Edward Graham, twenty-seven years old, who told the police that he lived at 225 Lexington Avenue. He put up a fight in the station, but told the Sergeant at the Grand Central Police Station that he was nowhere near Hopper when the latter thought his pocket was being picked. Graham was locked up on a charge of grand larceny.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR JEWS.

To be Started on Lines of Hebrew Free Loan Society.

At a meeting held last night at the home of Meyer Goldberg, 157 East Seventy-fourth Street, the initial steps were taken for the organization of the Hebrew Convalescent Home Association. The men behind the project are those who fourteen years ago founded the Hebrew Free Loan Society.

It is proposed to buy a tract of land in Westchester County and erect a home for convalescents just leaving the hospitals and who have no homes. As the Free Loan Society, the new project is to be non-sectarian, although it will be conducted by Jews.

President to Dine British Primate.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give a dinner to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Davidson at the White House on Sept. 24. The British Ambassador and Lady Durand will entertain the Archbishop and Mrs. Davidson in the same manner, probably on the 26th.

ST. GABRIEL'S ALUMNI MEET.

Old Officers Re-elected—Banquet to be Held on Nov. 16.

The alumni of St. Gabriel's School held a meeting at the old school hall last evening, and the following officers were re-elected: Ex-Judge Daniel F. Martin, President; John J. Killian, Vice President; Daniel J. Gallagher, Treasurer; Francis Reynolds, Financial Secretary, and John J. Delehanty, Recording Secretary.

The school was organized in 1847 by the late Rev. William H. Clowry, who was a brother of Robert C. Clowry, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Archbishop Farley was in charge of the school after Dr. Clowry's death, and when he was elevated to the Bishopric, Dean Dougherty succeeded him. The alumni will hold its annual banquet at the Park Avenue Hotel on Nov. 16.

Eighteenth St., Nineteenth St., Sixth Ave., New York.

Autumn Neckwear For Men Neckties—about the only thing, besides waistcoats and socks, in which a man may let his fancy as to color run riot.

Plenty of leeway here—from grave to gay, from sedate to "sporty." Browns and purples will be much worn, mostly figured effects on these grounds. Then the whole range of colors besides, with reds and grays in the van. Leading styles:

French Four-in-hands, 2, 2¼ and 2¾ in., 50c and $1.

Folded Squares, 2½ in. wide, $1 and $1.50.

Ready With Youths' CLOTHING All the young men of 15 to 20 years are invited to see the Fall and Winter styles we have ready for them.

Fabrics are carefully chosen—fine fancy cheviots, in smart brown and gray plaids and mixtures. Double-breasted coats are prime favorites, though the single-breasted style is also here in profusion. All the coats have fine broad shoulders, with moderately loose backs, and are slightly longer. Trousers are baggy. Prices for suits are $12 to $18.

and parents who are outfitting their boys for school days, have three fine styles to choose from at that price:

Double-breasted Jacket and Knee Trouser Suits, in plain blue and fancy mixed cheviots; sizes 8 to 16 years. Trousers have double seats and knees; all seams taped. $5.

Second floor, Ninth street.

$12 Office Chairs At $8 Imitation mahogany revolving chairs; with saddle-shaped wood seat, leather back, easy arms, heavy base, adjustable height, tilting spring; of fine construction and highly polished. Just fifteen of these regular $12 office chairs to sell at $8 each. Fifth floor.

Just In From Paris Is a delightful group of Dressing Sacques and Peignoirs. These fetching bits of French needlework are made of albatross, crepe de Chine or China silk, and trimmed with ribbons, Valenciennes lace and hand-stitching. $3 for a modest little Combing Sacque up to $30 for an elaborate model.

The Walking Hats at $3 These Silk Chenille Walking Hats for Women are marvels at their price. They are made on a stylish turban model, in brown, red, white, black, gray and navy blue, and are prettily trimmed with changeable silks.

An Extraordinary Group of Women's Fall Separate Skirts

Of course there's a history behind an unusual announcement such as this of Women's Autumn Skirts, perfect in style and finish, correct in colorings and materials, offered at prices that we would ordinarily pay the makers for the skirts—and right at the beginning of the season. The secret is, that we started the manufacturers early, on specially selected styles of our own, and obtained a fine price-concession by getting in ahead of the rush of Autumn orders.

Hence these splendid groups:

At $6

At $7

At $11

Second floor, Broadway.

NUTMEG DEMOCRATS SELECT STATE TICKET

Robertson Defeats Thayer for the Gubernatorial Nomination.

REPUBLICAN RULE DENOUNCED

Platform Also Calls for Home Rule, Uniform System of Municipal Charters, and Canadian Reciprocity.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 7.—In an enthusiastic convention held at the Hyperion Theatre to-day, of which Dean Rogers was made permanent Chairman, the Democratic State ticket was placed in nomination as follows:

For Lieutenant Governor—HENRY A. BISHOP of Bridgeport.

For Secretary of State—JAMES HUNTINGTON of Woodbury.

For State Treasurer—JOHN M. NEY of Hartford.

For Controller—WILLIAM BELCHER of New London.

For Congressman at Large—WILLIAM KENNEDY of Naugatuck.

For Presidential Electors—CHARLES B. GROSS of Hartford, CHRISTIAN STROBLE of Waterbury, CYRUS G. BECKWITH of New London, HERBERT B. CARY of Ridgefield, WILLIAM F. RANNEY of Cromwell, WILBUR O'CONNOR of Norfolk, LEBIUS E. SMITH of Putnam.

Mayor Thayer of Norwich, also a candidate for the Gubernatoral nomination, received 181 votes to 347 cast for Robertson, whose nomination was then made unanimous.

The platform heartily indorses the nomination of Alton B. Parker for President and Henry G. Davis for Vice President, and ratifies and confirms the declaration of principles adopted at the Democratic National Convention held at St. Louis July 6.

It accuses the last session of the General Assembly, which was under Republican control, of being the most extravagant in the history of the State, and of forcing upon the people of the State without their consent and even against their protest revolutionary charter amendments.

The doctrine of home rule and a uniform system of municipal charters is advocated, and the sale of public franchises without adequate compensation and protection to the people of the State is denounced.

An effective law prohibiting, under heavy penalties, all corporate interference with the Legislature by means of campaign contributions or appointments to office.

The right of every municipality to determine for itself by vote of its people, whether or not it shall adopt the policy of public ownership of public utilities is demanded, as also are efficient laws which shall offer the populous communities of the State a just and adequate representation in the House of Representatives.

"In the interest of the industrial life of Connecticut," the platform continues, "for the enlargement of its markets and the protection of its labor we demand such legislation as shall establish Canadian reciprocity."

SULZER REPORTS TO PARKER.

Predicts the Judge Will Be Elected by an Overwhelming Majority.

Special to The New York Times.

ESOPUS, N. Y., Sept. 8.—Fresh from a business trip through the West and a stumping tour of the southern tier of counties of New York State, Congressman William Sulzer of New York City came to Rosemount to-night with words of cheer for the candidate. He said that he had found evidences everywhere that the people appreciated Democracy's standard bearer and the party's platform.

"They are tired of Republican administration, Republican corruption, and Theodore Roosevelt," he declared. "In the Middle West we will carry Indiana and Wisconsin, and in the East we are absolutely sure of New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia. Montana, Colorado, and Nevada are also unquestionably Parker States, and these with the solid South will give the Democratic nominee an overwhelming majority in the Electoral College."

Asked about his attitude toward the Gubernatorial nomination in New York State, Mr. Sulzer said:

"I am very grateful for the kind things my friends are doing for me, but I am not seeking the honor and shall make no effort to win the prize."

Mr. Sulzer will remain at Rosemount overnight, leaving for New York to-morrow morning.

To-morrow the Democratic editors are coming.

NEW HAMPSHIRE CONVENTION.

Democrats Name Hollis for Governor—Colorado's Governor Denounced.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 7.—For a second time the Democrats of New Hampshire in convention to-day nominated Henry F. Hollis of Concord to be their candidate for Governor. Oliver E. Branch was chosen Chairman.

Mr. Branch in his speech bitterly attacked President Roosevelt, whom he classed as a "secret ally and co-partner of secessionists and rebels in Panama." He also accused the President of insulting Gen. Miles and of exploiting the military spirit.

The convention adopted a platform indorsing the National Democratic platform and candidates and named four Presidential Electors. The convention selected a candidate for Governor only, as all other State offices are filled by appointment.

Just before the adjournment of the convention, on motion of John B. Nash of Conway, a resolution was adopted condemning the "action of the Republican Governor of Colorado in deporting citizens of that State with a view to the destruction of labor unions."

NEW CANDIDATE FOR JUDGE.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 7.—The Washington County Convention of the Democratic Party was held at Fort Ann to-day, and resolutions were adopted instructing the delegates to the State Convention to support Richard L. Hand of Elizabethtown, President of the State Bar Association, for Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals of the nine counties of the Fourth Judicial District.

St. Lawrence, Franklin, Clinton, and Essex Counties have already elected delegates favorable to Mr. Hand, and efforts are being made by his friends to secure the solid support of the district in the State Convention.

GROVER CLEVELAND TO SPEAK.

Ex-President Will Be Heard for Parker and Davis in October.

Ex-President Grover Cleveland is expected to make from two to four speeches for Parker and Davis during October, according to information given out by National Chairman Taggart yesterday.

"There has been no formal request made to Mr. Cleveland to speak," said he, "but we have received assurances that he will speak. He will not go on the stump, as that term is understood, but will make from two to four speeches, perhaps more."

Won't Be Continental Party Nominee.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—George H. Shibley of this city, who was nominated by the Continental Party at Chicago as candidate for Vice President, has sent a letter to the Notification Committee of the party declining the nomination.

MOVING HOUSES WILL HELP.

Democrats in Ninth Hit by New Bridge Clearing, Adler Says.

Port Warden Charles S. Adler, who probably will be the candidate for Congress in the Ninth District this year against Representative Goldfogle, was asked yesterday about the situation in his district, the Eighth Assembly, this year.

"It is a good deal better than it was two years ago," he said. "We have cut down the Democratic majority on Delancey Street considerably by removing blocks of houses to make room for the approach of the new Williamsburg Bridge."

TO URGE CANAL POLICY.

Commercial Representatives Summoned to Attend Both State Conventions.

Henry B. Hebert, Chairman of the State Canal Executive Committee, issued a call yesterday to the members of the committee to attend the Republican and Democratic State Conventions, and work at them for the maintenance of the present State canal policy.

The membership of the committee, which is made up of representatives of commercial organizations throughout the State, is as follows: Henry B. Hebert of New York, Charles A. Schieren of Brooklyn, George Clinton of Buffalo, John D. Kernan of Utica, Frank S. Witherbee of Port Henry, Frank Brainerd of New York, Theodore S. Fassett of Tonawanda, George O. Clark of Oswego, J. Dudley of Niagara Falls, and Frank S. Gardner of New York.

CORTELYOU GOES TO CHICAGO.

Republicans Hear Rosy News from Connecticut and Nebraska.

Senator Platt of Connecticut was a visitor at headquarters yesterday and spoke confidently of his State.

"In my judgment," said the Senator, "President Roosevelt will have a greater majority in Connecticut this year than Gov. Chamberlain received in the State election of two years ago."

Irving Baxter, United State. District Attorney for Nebraska, said that Nebraska was certain to give a majority of at least 30,000 for Roosevelt.

"The only real fight in the State," said Mr. Baxter, "is over the Legislature. Bryan wants to go to the Senate, and his friends are bending all their efforts toward securing a majority in the Legislature. If the Legislature is carried by the Republicans, Representative Burkett will be the Republican candidate for Senator."

CAMPAIGN BOOK MIX-UP.

Coolidge Explains That Republican Reciprocity Plank Error.

The letter of Charles S. Hamlin of Massachusetts to THE NEW YORK TIMES, calling attention to the fact that on Page 47 of the Republican campaign book the reciprocity plank of the Democratic platform is quoted as the Republican plank, was something of a shock to the National campaign managers yesterday.

Secretary Coolidge said the error was amusing rather than serious, as the plank was correctly quoted on Page 487.

"A comparison of the two planks," said Mr. Coolidge, "will show that there is really very little difference between them. The Republican plank does not mention Canada specifically, but favors reciprocal commercial arrangements wherever they can be effected 'without injury to American agriculture, American labor, or American industry.' The Democratic plank favors them wherever they can be effected 'with benefit to American agriculture, manufactures, mining, or commerce.'"

Michigan Republicans Nominate Judges.

SAGINAW, Mich., Sept. 7.—Russell C. Ostrander of Lansing; Attorney General Charles A. Blair of Jackson, and Circuit Judge Aaron McAlvay of Manistee were nominated by the Repulican Judicial Convention to-day for Justices of the State Supreme Court.

TO BELLEVUE, NOT THEATRE.

Physician's Ruse to Land Mrs. Burns at Hospital.

Mrs. Elizabeth Burns, a well-to-do widow, who has been living at the Hotel Gerard for several months, was taken to Bellevue Hospital yesterday for an examination as to her mental condition.

Mrs. Burns's husband, Matthew Burns, died about two years ago, leaving her considerable property. For some time she has been under the care of Dr. H. W. Frauenthal of 783 Lexington Avenue. On Tuesday night Mrs. Burns and a trained nurse left the Gerard to go to the Hotel Ansonia, where she was to dine with some friends.

When Mrs. Burns reached Fifty-ninth Street she insisted on going into the Circle Theatre though she had no money with her. She brushed by the doorkeeper and was ejected after a scene. She then went to the Majestic Theatre, and was about to be ejected, when the nurse persuaded the ushers to leave the matter to her. She finally got the woman out, but it was not until 1 o'clock in the morning that she was able to get Mrs. Burns back to the Hotel Gerard.

Mrs. Burns was still anxious to go to the theatre, and Dr. Frauenthal told her if she would get into a carriage he would take her to the best theatre in the city. Once in the carriage she was driven to Bellevue Hospital.

SWIMMING RACES AT ST. LOUIS.

Two Records Broken in Final Events, but Only One Allowed.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 7.—American records were broken this afternoon in the final aquatic events of the Olympic games in the Life Savers' Lake at the World's Fair, that for 440 yards, by C. M. Daniels of the New York Athletic Club, and that for the half-mile, by E. Rausch of Germany. The new time made for the 440 yards will not go on record, however, because one of the watches failed to work. The time made by Daniels was 6:16 1-5, and the American record which he broke is 6:18⅖. Rausch's time for the half mile was 13:11 3-5, breaking the American record of 13:27 2-5, held by E. Carroll Schaefer of the University of Pennsylvania.

The team relay race by team of four men, each man swimming 50 yards, was won in 2:04 3-5 by the New York Athletic Club team, consisting of J. A. Ruddy, L. De B. Handley, L. J. Goodwin, and C. M. Daniels.

The final standing in points for the meet follows: New York, 40; Germany, 32; Hungary, 17; Olympic Club of San Francisco, 16.

The New Yorkers and other participants in the aquatic meet were guests to-night of the Missouri Athletic Club. In the club's pool to-night D. Holloway won a fifty-yard dash in 2:06 4-5, breaking the American indoor record. L. J. Goodwin of the New York Athletic Club finished second and J. A. Ruddy of the New York Athletic Club third. The summary follows:

440-Yard Championship Swim.—Won by C. M. Daniels, New York Athletic Club, New York City; Francis Galley, Olympic Club, San Francisco, Cal., second; Otto Wahle, New York Athletic Club, New York City, third. Time—6:16 1-5.

220-Yard Swim, Handicap.—Won by Marguard Schwartz, Missouri Athletic Club, St. Louis, (25 seconds;) R. E. Beach, Chicago Athletic Association, Chicago, (40 seconds,) second; D. Hammond, Chicago Athletic Association, Chicago, (30 seconds,) third. Time—3:06 1-5.

Half-Mile Championship Swim.—Won by E. Rausch, Germany; Francis Galley, Olympic Club, San Francisco, Cal., second; G. Kiss, Budapest, Hungary, third. Time—13:11 3-5.

Quarter-Mile Swim, Breast Stroke.—Won by George Zarharras, Hungary; Walter Brock, Germany, second; H. J. Handy, Young Men's Christian Association, Chicago, third. Time—7:27 3-5.

100-Yard Swim, Handicap.—Won by H. B. Warren, New York Athletic Club, (11 seconds;) E. T. Swatek, Young Men's Christian Association, Chicago, (7 seconds,) second; J. A. Ruddy, New York Athletic Club, (6 seconds,) third. Time—1:21 2-5.

VERMONT VOTE STARTS A REPUBLICAN HURRAH

Campaign Managers Think Election All Settled Now.

CORTELYOU SAYS BUT LITTLE

He Declares the Figures Speak for Themselves—Result Meaningless, Say Taggart and Sheehan.

Republican leaders at both National and State Headquarters were delighted yesterday over the returns from Vermont. Everybody seemed to think there was no use of further talk, because Vermont had settled the whole question. National Chairman Cortelyou said that comment was unnecessary—that the figures spoke for themselves. Governor-Chairman Odell said:

"Let's see; if it was below 25,000 we were to lose, and if it was about that we were to win. Well, it's about 32,000, isn't it?"

"Hurrah for the farmer!" said Mr. Babcock. "He's the fellow that made the big vote in Vermont, and there is no doubt that the farmers throughout the country are going to do the same."

"The significant thing about the Vermont result," said Representative Dalzell of Pennsylvania, "is that the people were satisfied. There was no apathy. Their minds were fully made up."

"From the day the public," Representative Fowler of New Jersey said, "had an opportunity of comparing Judge Parker's speech of acceptance with that of President Roosevelt there has been a steady trend toward the Republican nominee."

At Democratic Headquarters it was declared that little or no importance should be attached to the Vermont election. Chairman Taggart and Executive Chairman Sheehan issued a joint statement in which they said:

"The result in Vermont is not surprising in view of the unparalleled efforts made by the Republicans. The candidate for Vice President, the Secretary of War, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Senators of the United States, and Representatives in Congress, assisted by a host of lesser lights, made urgent appeals to the Republican farmers to go to the polls. Moreover, it was proclaimed throughout the State that the President had promised the candidate for Governor to attend his inauguration in case he obtained a majority of 40,000.

"In view of these efforts, never made before by any party in a September election, it is remarkable that the Administration did not succeed in increasing the Republican majority. Indeed, it did not even increase the Republican vote, which does not exceed 48,050, while in 1898 it was 53,426, and in 1900 it was 48,441."

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Sept. 7.—Reports reached the President to-day indicating that the Republican plurality in Vermont would be at least normal. Charles J. Bell, Republican candidate for Governor, telegraphed as follows:

President Roosevelt this afternoon telegraphed to Senator Proctor, the Governor-elect, and the Republican State Committee congratulating them on the result.

Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis was one of the callers on the President to-day. He arrived from New York and took luncheon with President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill. He was en route from Maine, where he has been on his vacation. He left for New York on an afternoon train and will proceed to Washington.

Four Years Ago Republicans Won by 31,312—Gains in Legislature.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Sept. 7.—The vote for Governor in yesterday's State election, with only two small towns missing, shows a Republican plurality of 31,500, which is believed to be within a few votes of the correct figures. Four years ago it was 31,312.

The total vote for Governor without the two towns is: Bell, (Rep.,) 47,991; Porter, (Dem.,) 16,492, a Republican plurality of 31,449. The missing towns gave a Republican plurality last year of 68.

A tabulation of the returns compared with those of 1900 show that the Republicans gained in eight counties. The losses in six counties aggregate 1,432, making a net Republican loss of 444. The Democrats gained in only three counties an aggregate of 212 votes, losing in the other eleven, an aggregate of 1,241, making a net Democratic loss of 1,029.

The next Legislature will be more completely controlled by the Republicans than for many years. The returns from 221 towns show that the Senate will be solidly Republican, where last year there were five Democrats. Almost complete returns from the Congressional vote indicate a plurality for Foster in the First District of 13,850 and for Haskins in the Second District of 16,900.

SMOOT AGAIN AN ISSUE.

Salt Lake Paper Bolts State Ticket—Charges Mormon Domination.

Special to The New York Times.

SALT LAKE, Sept. 7.—The Salt Lake Tribune, the recognized organ of the Republican Party in Utah, declines to support the State ticket. Last night the State Committee held a meeting with Senator Kearns, owner, and Joseph Lippman, manager of the newspaper, at which an acrimonious debate occurred. Kearns and Lippman charged in effect that the Mormon Church, acting through Senator Smoot, dictated the nomination of the Republican State ticket.

They asserted that they would consider no proposition to become harmonized for the ticket until they had some guarantee that the ulterior influences invoked at the convention would not be utilized again. This the committee made up of Smoot men, asserted its inability to promise. After the meeting Chairman Spry said he expected the paper would make an Anti-Mormon fight. He added:

"I expect they will go ahead on that line until for every old liberal they take from us here in town we will get two Mormon Democrats in the country."

The Tribune to-day says: "The only issue is Smoot and the Mormon Church domination which threatens disaster to the Republican Party not only of Utah, but of the United States."

Scudder Doesn't Want Renomination.

Representative J. Townsend Scudder of the First Congress District will not stand for renomination this Fall. Mr. Scudder is said to be out for the Democratic nomination for Attorney General on the State ticket. He has twice been elected from a district which nominally is Republican and includes the voting precinct of President Roosevelt.

Dr. RICHARD STRAUSS

The Metrostyle PIANOLA

THE LATEST of the great musicians who have expressed enthusiastic appreciation of the Pianola is no less an authority than Dr. Richard Strauss, the famous German composer. The original letter which was addressed to the Berlin branch of the Aeolian Company has just been received in New York, the following being a literal translation:

[TRANSLATION.]

BERLIN, August 18, 1904.

Gentlemen:

I gladly certify that I have a great admiration for your Metrostyle Pianola, and am sincerely interested in it. If I had not heard it myself, it would have appeared to me as incredible that it should render the very playing of the artist as if he were sitting personally at the instrument. Even the thought of it still appears to me almost like a fairy tale.

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) RICHARD STRAUSS.

The tributes paid to the Metrostyle Pianola during the past summer by the foremost masters of music in all quarters of the globe are most impressive. This recognition has not ended with verbal praise, or even written endorsements, but many of these great musicians have, like Dr. Strauss, specially metrostyled their interpretations for the Pianola.

In co-operating with the manufacturers in making the Pianola valuable to all music lovers, these great musicians effectively demonstrate how thoroughly in earnest they are in their written words. The Metrostyle makes available to every owner of the instrument the personal interpretations of these eminent artists and insures a musicianly rendition even to the person wholly without musical training.

NOTE: The Metrostyle is controlled exclusively by the manufacturers of the Pianola. No other piano-player has any feature approximating this wonderful invention.

Prices, $250 and $300.

NEWPORT HORSE SHOW ENDS.

Mrs. Grosvenor and E. D. Jordan Divide Championship Honors.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 7.—The Newport Horse Show was concluded to-day with a large attendance and a fairly attractive programme. The leading features were the championships, with which the afternoon was ended. In these Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor and Eben D. Jordan shared the honors, each taking two championships, with Mrs. Grosvenor a little in the lead with two reserves. Mrs. Grosvenor's championship honors were secured by Rosebery in the tall, single-harness horse class, and with Corinne in the saddle class. In the latter her black mare Petroleum was given the reserve, and similar honors were secured by Sultan and Khedive in the large harness pair class. The championships were not the only prizes secured by Mrs. Grosvenor's horses during the afternoon, her winnings including three firsts, three seconds, two thirds, and one fourth prize. She is the largest winner of the show; and her Rosebery, Corinne, and Champion John English are still unbeaten.

Mr. Jordan's championships were taken by Hildred in the small single-harness class, and by Hildred and Plymouth Champion in the class for small pairs. He also won four first prizes in addition to the championship. Reginald C. Vanderbilt's horses were not so successful as in the earlier days of the show, his winnings being four second and two third prizes. The Roxton Farms entries secured one championship, one reserve, and one first prize. Charles T. Proctor secured two first, one second, one third, and one fourth prizes, and J. H. Moore, one each first, second, and third prizes.

An interesting feature of the afternoon was the phaeton class, in which Miss Belle Beach drove Mr. Jordan's Kitty Grey and The Baron, Mrs. Vanderbilt drove Reginald C. Vanderbilt's Fad and Fancy, and Miss Gertrude Gilbert drove Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's Fascination and Admiration. It was a close contest, but the judges, after long deliberation, awarded the blue ribbon to the Jordan pair, second honors going to Miss Vanderbilt, and the third to Mrs. Grosvenor's pair. The summary follows:

Single Horses for Lady's Phaeton, 14.3 to 15 hands.—Won by E. D. Jordan's ch. g. The Baron; R. C. Vanderbilt's br. g. Herald, second; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's Little Boy Blue, third; C. T. Proctor's ch. m. Red Rose, fourth; commended, Jackson Boy.

Harness Horses, 15.1 and over.—Won by J. H. Moore's br. h. Burlingham; Lehman Strauss's ch. g. Dusty Farnum, second; C. T. Proctor's ch. m. Red Rose, third; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's b. g. Jack Horner, fourth.

Road Gig Horses, 15.1 and over.—Won by Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's s. g. Parade; C. T. Proctor's ch. g. Jackson Boy, second; Lehman Strauss's b. g. Salute, third; John Doyle's br. g. Lord Londes, fourth.

Pairs and Pairs, horses to count 50 per cent. at cart and appointments 50 per cent.—Won by Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's b. g. Sultan and b. g. Khedive; J. H. Moore's b. g. Roland and b. g. Lord Roberts, second; R. C. Vanderbilt's b. m. Orchid and b. m. [illegible], third.

Pairs of Horses 15.3 or over, suitable for tandem, unicalash, or omnibus.—Won by Roxton Farm's b. g. Harmony and b. m. Portia; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's ch. g. Captivation and ch. g. Inspiration, second; R. C. Vanderbilt's b. g. Assessment and b. m. Surprise, third; Strauss & Hexter's b. g. Cedar Falls and b. g. Wells, fourth.

Pairs and Phaetons, women to drive.—Won by E. D. Jordan's ch. m. Kitty Grey and ch. g. The Baron; R. C. Vanderbilt's blk. g. Fad and br. g. Fancy, second; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's ch. g. Fascination and ch. m. Admiration, third.

Harness Tandems, wheeler 14.2 and under 15.2.—Won by E. D. Jordan's ch. g. The Baron and ch. m. Hildred; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's b. g. Sensation and ch. g. Fascination, second; J. H. Moore's b. g. The Baron and b. g. Lord Russell, third.

Pairs of Horses for Ladies' Phaetons, 14.3 to 15.2.—Won by E. D. Jordan's ch. m. Kitty Grey and ch. g. The Baron; Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's ch. g. Fascination and ch. m. Admiration, second; J. F. Manning's b. m. Mystic II. and b. m. Marigold II., third.

Special Class for Dealers Only, horses 14.2 and under 15.2.—Won by C. T. Proctor's b. g. Hiawatha; Lehman Strauss's b. g. Salute, second; Strauss & Hexter's blk. m. Mimosa and ch. m. Armenia, third and fourth.

Pairs of Horses, 14.2 and under 15.2.—Won by C. T. Proctor's b. g. Hiawatha and b. g. Brockton Boy; Strauss & Hexter's blk. m. Mimosa and blk. m. Margaret, second; J. F. Manning's b. m. Mystic II. and b. m. Marigold II., third; Strauss & Hexter's ch. m. Armenia and ch. m. Auditor, fourth.

Saddle Horses, to carry 160 pounds.—Won by Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's ch. m. Corinne; same owner's blk. g. Petroleum, second; E. H. Weatherbee's ch. g. Masagan, third; C. E. Myrick's ch. m. Marion, fourth.

Best Harness Horse under 15.2.—Won by E. D. Jordan's c. m. Hildred; reserve to C. T. Proctor's b. g. Hiawatha.

Best Harness Horse 15.2 and over.—Won by Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's b. g. Roseberry; reserve to Roxton Farm's b. g. Harmony.

Best Pair of Harness Horses 15.2 and over.—Won by Roxton Farm's b. g. Harmony and b. m. Portia; reserve to Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's b. g. Sultan and b. g. Khedive.

Best Pair of Harness Horses under 15.2.—Won by E. D. Jordan's ch. m. Hildred and ch. g. Plymouth Champion; reserve to C. T. Proctor's b. g. Hiawatha and b. g. Brockton Boy.

Best Saddle Horse.—Won by Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's c. m. Corinne; reserve to Mrs. J. B. M. Grosvenor's blk. g. Petroleum.

FOURTEEN PAGES.

THE CAMPAIGN THUS FAR.

The only certain and safe inference from the 32,000 Republican plurality in Vermont is that Roosevelt Electors will be chosen in that State on Nov. 8. The conclusion that the September election in Vermont makes sure the election of ROOSEVELT and FAIRBANKS in November would not be warranted either by human experience or human reason. If everybody came to that conclusion at once, of course both party committees would close their headquarters and stop spending money, the Democrats because further effort would be hopeless, the Republicans because it would be superfluous. Forty-four other States will vote for Presidential Electors in November.

At the same time the gentlemen at the Democratic Headquarters up town would show themselves to be pretty poor observers of political signs and portents if they did not accept the result in Vermont as a proof that their campaign thus far has made little impression upon the voters whose support they must have if they are to win. Vermont is obdurately Republican, but its electorate has shown in the past that it was sensitive to impending political changes. The rather unusual Republican plurality this year means not that the Green Mountain State voters are insensitive, but that no marked impression has been made upon them by the Democratic candidate and campaign. If the gentlemen at headquarters will get out among the people of this community they will probably hear from all sorts and conditions of men in the street and elsewhere the almost universal opinion that they are making a losing fight. They will be told that Judge PARKER'S campaign reached high-water mark in the days following the publication of the gold-standard telegram; that the ebb then set in, and that since his speech of acceptance the fall of the Parker tide has been visible, and somewhat disquietingly rapid. It is well that the campaign managers should know these things. They are too sensible to prize the comforts of the fool's paradise above the manly satisfaction of knowing where they stand in the serious business in which they are engaged.

They should know then, for Vermont warns them of it, that they are losing ground daily. There is virtue in high respect for law; there is solid strength in reverence for the Constitution; the love of peace and an aversion to strife are commendable; a dislike of any encroachment by one department of the Government upon the field of another department is an indication of a mind trained in a sound school. All these qualities Judge PARKER has, some of them President ROOSEVELT has not. But this advantage is not enough to elect the Democratic candidate. The picture of a tranquil canvass in which 15,000,000 freemen, all philosophers, all highly enlightened, all burning with the love of truth and the hatred of error, might sit down to study the principles and professions of the rival parties, and, undisturbed by the hoarse appeals of the stump or the tumult of processions with banners and bands, should with calm deliberation make their choice between the two candidates, is in many ways delightful. But that is a dream, a foolish imagining; there is no such thing possible among men. If it were possible, we incline to the opinion that Judge PARKER'S chances would be vastly better than they are. His campaign up to this time has been calm, sober, sedate, and, not to put too fine a point upon it, somewhat sleepy. The result is that President ROOSEVELT, feeling at the present moment entirely sure of his election, is himself keeping preternaturally quiet. He has nothing to fear except his own mistakes or those of his party. If he felt that Judge PARKER were a dangerous antagonist we may be very sure that Oyster Bay would be a source of stirring news every day.

It is not too late. A two months' campaign is enough if it is an awakening campaign. The temperamental contrast between the candidates must be kept before the voter, but other things must be put before him too. It appears that it is not enough to prove that President ROOSEVELT is somewhat given to overriding the law and Constitution, while Judge PARKER is by habit scrupulously observant of their provisions. Plainly there is nothing to be gained by keeping the "issue" of the Philippines to the fore. To begin with, it is not an issue; if it were, the Democrats would lose by agitating it. They have lost votes already by the attempt to keep that question in view. The tariff remains and Canadian reciprocity remains, two sound economic issues of high importance which the managers have left practically untouched.

We have hoped almost against hope that the Democratic Party would have the sense to make effective use of the issue of tariff reform before the Republicans rob them of it, as they certainly will before many years by revising the tariff themselves. We have repeatedly pointed out how the demand for a recasting of the tariff could be made helpful to the Democrats in this campaign. We have told how even in Republican Massachusetts the agitation for reciprocity with Canada has made such headway that it has been thought to imperil Senator LODGE'S re-election to the Senate. We do not know that these things make any impression at all upon the gentlemen at headquarters. Evidently they do not. A review of the history of the Dingley tariff, especially of the making of it, would be rich in revelations of the Republican partnership with the favored interests. An examination of its workings would show how it hampers the industrial and commercial development of the country. The appeal for tariff reform could be based upon the demand of American manufacturers for the freedom of foreign markets. Upon the question of Canadian reciprocity the defenders of the Republican policy could be silenced. But the tariff and reciprocity do not interest the managers of Judge PARKER'S campaign. We still hope that in his letter of acceptance Judge PARKER will show that they interest him. Something must be said and something done to convince the independent voters that the country will gain by a change at Washington.

THE SUBWAY SETTLEMENT.

The public is not intensely interested in the precise terms of the settlement reached in the dispute that until yesterday menaced the city with the enormous inconvenience of a strike on the elevated roads, or in the question whether the men or the company have gained or yielded the more of their respective "demands." But the public is undoubtedly greatly relieved that a final settlement has been reached which the representatives of each side declare to be mutually satisfactory.

On one point we think that there will be general approval of the course of the company in insisting and of the men in yielding, and that is the special examination required as to physical fitness for the duties of the employés, particularly as to sight. It is possible that this examination may be more exacting than is absolutely necessary, but of that neither the men nor the employers can be regarded as safe judges. It is a matter for decision by experts, and we understand that the company bases its position on the advice of competent experts. The consequences of even slight defects in the physical organization of men intrusted with the lives of thousands of people daily are far too serious to permit of the least known laxity in the tests. The tests that are known to be entirely efficient may work hardship in a certain number of individual cases, but that is of no real importance compared to the risks incurred.

THE READJUSTMENT OF STEEL PRICES.

Business mistakes more frequently result from a lack of the courage of convictions than from any other cause. It is probable that the effort to hold the prices of steel above the figures at which profitable domestic orders could be secured, and to run the mills on export orders taken from 20 to 30 per cent. below home market quotations, resulted in large degree from the fear that any other policy would seriously alarm the public and produce a sharp decline in the value of such industrials as would thus be brought within the depressing influence of an awakening of popular distrust. Something like a readjustment of prices having been effected by the competition of concerns outside of the United States Steel Corporation, and the effect upon the price of its securities having been very different from what was expected, its management seems to have found the courage to do what it should have done much sooner, and the tendency now is to reduce nominal quotations for steel products to figures which represent those at which the moderate requirements of consumption are being supplied when buyers are so situated as to be deemed desirable customers.

What seems to have been the heavy cut in prices agreed upon at the conference on Tuesday was really no cut at all. It was more in the nature of a confession of pre-existing conditions, and showed a willingness on the part of the manufacturers to take the public into their confidence and do away with the fictions of quotations which all in interest knew to be nominal. Anything like a recovery of prosperity in the iron and steel trades is impossible as long as buyers are in a condition of uncertainty as to whether the prices asked are those which are secretly offered to favored buyers, or are obtainable for the asking from producers outside the combination. With a productive capacity admittedly much larger than is needed to meet the present requirements of consumption, the choice open to the manufacturers would seem to be the closing of works or the reduction of prices to figures which will tempt orders. Everything considered, the latter course is preferable on the score of economy. In following it the managers of the Steel Corporation are showing only ordinary business wisdom, since in the face of the competition which must be reckoned with any other policy would mean the diversion to others of trade which they have every reason to wish to hold.

The statistical position of iron and steel is such that the present situation of the markets for those metals is not easy of explanation. In view of the readjustment of prices it is likely to become more intelligible within a few weeks. Reductions of $4 to $6 per ton in heavy materials will undoubtedly set in motion a more active consumptive demand in view of the near approach of Winter, with its slower and more costly transportation, and the result of this should be to put the market in shape for a wholesome recovery on business for 1905.

COPPER AS A GERMICIDE.

Dr. EDWARD MARTIN of the Philadelphia Department of Public Health quotes with great satisfaction the statement of Dr. GEORGE T. MOORE of the Department of Agriculture as follows: "There is no doubt whatever in my mind that typhoid fever contaminated drinking water may be effectively rid of the germs by allowing it to stand for three or four hours in an even temperature in a copper kettle." So far as we are aware, this fact has not been disputed. It will be noticed, however, that Dr. MOORE does not venture any judgment upon the effect of such exposure to copper upon the potability of water. Dr. MARTIN is much more confident on this subject. He says:

> Popular opinion notwithstanding, there is no danger in the use of clean copper vessels. More copper is taken into the system in a meal of ordinary French canned peas than will be taken by drinking water from a copper vessel for five years. An infinitesimally small portion of the copper is dissolved in the water, and it is this copper in this, its colloidal form that is so highly beneficial.

The chemistry of this proposition is very simple. Unless the copper is acted upon by the water and some of its salts are taken up, standing the water in a copper vessel would not sterilize it. The term colloidal, which Dr. MARTIN uses with so much satisfaction, does not seem to have been well chosen. It means jelly-like or glue-like. It does not describe the condition of any soluble salt of copper, but may describe very correctly the agglutination of organic infusoria which the water contains.

The fact remains that copper salts are not safe to take into the human system, and to say that one gets more in a portion of French peas than he would in a glass of water is to beg the question. Such advice from such a source is likely to be mischievous.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Some gently—or perhaps it was weakly—frivolous remarks about the Martha Washington Hotel that recently appeared in this column seem to have been read very much amiss by a stern Connecticut damsel, for she has sent us a letter in which she takes up and scorns almost every one of the points we tried to make. "The statement," she begins, "that this hotel is a 'tacit but severe charge' against our brothers is an utter misconception; the hotel became a necessity because of a 'tacit but severe charge' against your sisters, for the alternative was not merely 'to frown or to smile,' but an hotel or no shelter." Thus well started, and "an" put before "hotel" without the use of a net, our indignant correspondent runs on with charming agility. "The law (for the protection of men) which debars women from all reputable hotels after 6 P. M. unless accompanied by a trunk occasioned the necessity for such an harbor. Women are frequently obliged to arrive in the city after 6 P. M. unaccompanied by a trunk. Just why that particular article of baggage should be a feminine passport, allay manly fears, and render the same roof a safe shelter for man, is inexplicable." It is at least difficult to explain—in print. A trunk means a good many things, both as to methods of departure from home and purposes of arrival at the hotel, and the test, though rough, does have merits as easily appreciable to the feminine mind, when reasonably sophisticated, as to those of the other variety. It is, however, the other variety that next receives attention. "To the masculine mind there may be 'something fundamentally funny in the implications of an hotel conducted exclusively for women,' but the feminine mind fails to see the humor. And to a party of foreigners on observation automobiles the 'most curious and amusing sight in New York' would be hotels where men 'hide themselves behind defended bulwarks' (entrance doors) after dark, and consign women to the hospitality of the street and the shelter of the sky." Doubtless our correspondent meant to write "should be" where she wrote "would be," for she really cannot think that the foreigners find at all unfamiliar as much of the situation described as exists. In a cooler moment perhaps our indignant critic may realize the fact that the regulations to which she objects—regulations, by the way, which are iron-bound rules in very few hotels—were devised entirely for the protection of women themselves, and that if these regulations occasionally inflict hardship on worthy members of that amiable band, they are in that respect no worse than any other well-intentioned restriction of which we have knowledge.

—To an inquiry made at a recent convention of electricians as to the best way of bringing the public to realize the fallacy of municipal ownership the most notable answer was made by a speaker who said that this end was to be obtained "first, by giving the best service possible and charging only enough to net a reasonable return, and second, by showing failures on the part of municipalities that have installed their own plants." In the account of this discussion that is before us, only the speaker just quoted made any reference to good service and small charges as effective means of fighting the public ownership idea. The other speakers were content with reliance upon the careful exploitation of every failure of a municipal experiment along these lines, and the favorite suggestion was that the absurdities and inaccuracies of the bookkeeping by which the experimenters occasionally figure out success should be pressed upon the attention of all communities where an inclination to trouble the private corporations had revealed itself or was suspected. Much can so be done, no doubt, for the public ownership people are most deplorable accountants. The chief difference, however, between their reports and those of a good many private corporations dealing with public utilities is that the former are false through ignorance and the latter deceptive through intention. But really admirable was the advice of the man who thought of good service and low charges. There lies safety, beyond a question, and the safety that comes, too, not from winning a fight, but from having no fighting to do. The public is too distrustful of itself, and especially of its politicians, ever to attempt business on its own account except as an escape from unendurable extortion and as the smaller of two evils.

—In commenting upon the small number of great fortunes revealed by the wills filed in France during the past year The London Globe takes occasion to say, with characteristic amiability: "The Frenchman is too wise to be given over to the hunger for gold, and the whole joy of living for him is not centred in piling up dollars, as it seems to be across the Atlantic. He is satisfied with thousands of francs, and with the appearance rather than the actuality of wealth. He likes to retire and live at his ease, and therein he follows the dictates of the Old World philosophy." How deadly tiresome did talk of that kind long ago become! For years and years it has alternated in the remarks of our foreign critics with derision or denunciation of our wild extravagance, and to never a one of them has it once occurred that we cannot possibly make the piling up of dollars the whole joy of living and at the same time shock the world by reckless expenditures. Perhaps somebody, some day, will enter upon a careful investigation of the public benefits conferred by the early retiring Frenchman and those conferred by the American business men of the same age who remain influential factors of the markets—will compare their relative merits as intellectual forces and moral examples. Curiously enough, the Frenchmen of whom France is really proud and whose names win recognition abroad do not "retire" in middle life, or in old age either, if they can help it. One might almost suspect that the Frenchmen for whom retirement has so many charms are less indifferent to the piling up of dollars than reluctant to prolonging beyond actual necessity any kind of activity, bodily or mental.

ENGLAND'S IMPORTATIONS.

From The London Mail.

The compilers of the Statistical Abstract of the United Kingdom for the years 1889 to 1903 may be relied on for accuracy, and the long tables, pages, and chapters of figures abound with interest for every one. They tell the story of almost every trade and industry, of the avenues of commerce throughout the world, the state of markets, of employment, of pauperism, &c.—the whole life of the people, indeed, reduced to figures.

	Pound.		Pound.
Bacon and hams	16.35	Currants & raisins	4.51
Beef	20.24	Preserved meat	1.83
Butter	10.57	Fresh mutton	11.1
Margarine	2.30	Pork	2.4
Cheese	6.99	Potatoes	23.5
Cocoa	1.20	Rice	14.5
Coffee	0.71	Sugar, raw	33.2
Wheat	232.53	Sugar, refined	49.0
Maize	132.08	Tea	6.0
Wheat meal, and flour	54.37	Tobacco	1.9

Enough eggs were imported to supply every man, woman, and child with fifty-five. Enough wine was brought in to give us a third of a gallon each, and spirits to provide nearly one-fifth of a gallon. As we drank four-fifths of a gallon of British spirits each, that meant a total consumption of almost one gallon per head. Besides, there was enough beer to give every one 29¼ gallons. This shows a smaller consumption of liquor than in any of the previous eight years.

The imports of all kinds of merchandise last year were equal to £12 16s. 1d. per head of the population, which is a larger figure than ever before, and 4s. 3d. more than in 1902. The exports of British produce alone equaled £6 17s. 3d. per head, or 2s. 2d. more than in 1902. The only years with a higher record per head were 1890 and 1900. The total incoming and outgoing trade was £21 6s. 3d. per head, which is larger than any of the preceding years save 1900, which exceeded this sum by twopence.

A most interesting comparison is given of the people employed in textile factories in the years between 1895 and 1901. Later figures are not yet available. Take the first and the last years quoted:

Flax jute, hemp, &c.	161,019	150,31
Silk	35,882	31,56
Hosiery	35,198	38,54
Lace	14,568	17,90
Elastic, horsehair, &c.	8,800	8,49
All materials	1,075,751	1,029,35

Nothing is more striking than the development of tramways in the last fifteen years, as may be seen from a summary of the figures for the United Kingdom:

Lines open, miles	949	1,77
Total capital	£13,500,000	£40,000,00
Passengers carried	447,500,000	1,682,000,00
Gross receipts	£3,000,000	£8,000,00
Working expenses	2,225,000	5,500,00

The returns as to education still show 1,000,000 truants per day. Whereas in 189 there were nearly 5,500,000 children on the registers of primary day schools and fewer than 4,250,000 attending daily, there were 6,750,000 on the registers last year, and nearly 5,750,000 present. Proportionately that is an improvement, though still a bad report. Evening schools have progressed from an average attendance of 49,500 in 1899 to 257,244 in 1901.

The money going from the exchequer to the primary day schools has been nearly trebled, having advanced from £4,225,000 in 1889 to £8,000,000 in 1895, and £12,000,000 in the present year.

Japanese Socialism.

From The London News.

The presence of a Japanese delegate at the Socialist Congress is natural enough. Japan has imported so many of our institutions and ideas that Socialism was bound to creep in among them. Katayama's party, like its European models, is now engaged in agitating against the war. It is not pro-Russian; neither as Japanese nor as Socialists could Katayama and his friends have any sympathy with the Slav despotism. But Japanese Socialists oppose the war, no doubt, because it means heavy taxation on the poor and the strengthening of the military element, which is always most hostile to Socialism. Their efforts will be useless. In the midst of Japan's life and death struggle there is no room for debate as to the merits of a war policy. But after the war is over, more will be heard of the Socialists in connection with the labor movement. Katayama declares that Japanese trades unions have no politics, but only seek to improve the condition of the worker. He errs in comparing them in this respect to our trade unions, which at the forthcoming congress will affirm their political faith in decisive terms on free trade, Chinese labor, and other burning questions of the day. But Katayama probably hopes, like English Socialists, to capture the trade unions for the independent Socialist Party. It remains to be seen whether this policy, which has not gone far in England, will succeed in Japan.

Beauty an Impediment.

From The Philadelphia Record.

"'The fatal gift of beauty' is an expression that used to be a great favorite with the writers of cheap fiction," said a professor in one of the business colleges. "As a matter of fact, it contains more truth than fiction. Every year we turn out a lot of young girls who are equipped to take positions as stenographers, typewriters, and bookkeepers, and I have frequently noted that the pretty ones, those who possess the aforesaid 'fatal gift of beauty,' have a hard struggle to get positions. Take two girls, one pretty and attractive, and the other plain and homely, and in applying for a position, although they may be possessed of equal ability, the homely girl stands the better chance of getting the job. Lots of professional and business men are afraid of pretty girls, and lots of them have jealous wives. For his own peace of mind the man with a jealous wife will choose the ugliest girl he can find, so long as she can do his work. That's why I say that 'the fatal gift of beauty' has some foundation in fact."

Why hire isn't higher.

ROOSEVELT'S SAYINGS.

No Necessity to Go Back for Adverse Criticism.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to express to you the gratification with which I have observed the admirable spirit of fair play exhibited in the editorial comments of your paper upon the Presidential campaign, and which goes so far toward raising the value of your opinions above that of the biased utterances of many of your contemporaries of both parties. This spirit was especially exemplified in an editorial entitled "Roosevelt's Sayings" in your issue of Aug. 29, in which you administer a dignified reproof to those ill-advised Democratic partisans who have attempted to make campaign arguments out of certain statements made some years ago by Mr. Roosevelt, the historian, before he could have had any expectation of becoming a successor of those Presidents he criticised.

As Mr. James C. Carter has so ably pointed out, the great fight is not against Mr. Roosevelt as an individual, but against the influences which control a Republican Administration, and to which he, with all his undoubtedly strong individuality, has succumbed. Besides being irrelevant to the real question at issue, such arguments are very poor, for the reason that the only effect they can possibly have on an unbiased mind is to create the impression that Mr. Roosevelt's career as a President has been such that his opponents are obliged to go back to Mr. Roosevelt, the historian, to find anything open to adverse criticism. That is certainly not true, and is an impression that no good Democrat could wish to create.

Another question upon which I am glad to see your paper has risen superior to party lines is that of the government of the Philippines, in which you agree with President Roosevelt and disagree with our candidate's view that we should now promise them that they shall have their independence when they are fit for it. It seems that it would be a mistake to now bind ourselves in such a way that future events, which no one can predict, may render it necessary for us to repudiate such a promise. Certainly Judge Parker would do well to, in this one instance, follow the example of the President and heed the advice of, not the Republican Secretary of War, but the former non-partisan Governor of the Philippines, now Secretary, Taft, who was on the ground and knows. NOMINATION OF JUDGES.

Failure to Name Cullen and Werner Would Endanger Democrats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading the editorial in this morning's TIMES on "The Judgeships," I must state it is the most sensible and fair presentation of the rights and ethics of the two present Associate Judges now sitting in the Court of Appeals.

If the Democrats do not nominate Judge Cullen, who is a Democrat, for Chief Judge, and Judge Werner, a Republican, for Associate Judge of said court, the Democratic Party and its respective candidates, whoever they may be, will suffer the repetition of what the Republicans suffered last Fall in refusing to nominate Judge Gray, then a Democratic candidate for said office.

Judges Cullen and Werner have had four years' experience on the Court of Appeals bench, and are thoroughly experienced in their work. They are gentlemen of the highest judicial acumen and moral integrity, and I believe it is the wish of the entire bar of this State that these two gentlemen should receive the nomination for their respective offices from both parties, thereby eliminating the judiciary from partisan politics. LOVE DETHRONED.

H. B. Marriott-Watson and the American Woman.

"She is a handsome clothes horse," declares H. B. Marriott-Watson in writing about the American woman in the current Nineteenth Century. He arrives at this conclusion through the following logic:

"The mondaine of New York and Newport will run after new dukes and buy new jewels. The sober wife of the sober New England farmer will sit under new pastors and buy new drugs.

"The American woman has perfected the cult of pleasure as no living being in all the history of the world. A certain common bond unites the drab woman on her farm and the belle of Fifth Avenue.

"That spirit is visible in all classes of real Americanized women, whether in the daughter of the millionaire or in the factory hand. It is the spirit of independence which finds its logical issue in cold selfishness. The factory girls refuse to be married and take up the burdens of maternity; they put their savings upon their backs and 'have a good time.'

"The typical American woman is proverbially careless of the male of her race. We Europeans see it every day in the case of our American visitors. The American woman is set on getting the best she can for her money, or her father's money, or it may be her husband's. She rides over man roughshod. It is the era of the woman's revenge, and apparently she is getting it. But in the result it is achieved by a demoralization of sex, even by a debauch of sex.

"The doctrine of the superiority of woman, or its analogue, the dominance of woman, has resulted in a breach of the laws of maternity. Evasion of childbirth follows, and will follow, the passage of woman's rights and the higher feminism. Even on the threshold of this great and delicate question is one stayed by the consciousness that the American woman has aimed the first great blow at the reign of Love. So far as the eye of man can carry now, American civilization, by the overthrow of Love and its potency, will have inaugurated a new era fraught with portentous issues.

"Having emerged from mere barbarism into an age of sentiment, are we to complete the cycle by passing into a stage where considerations of personal ambition, or vanity, or greed, or something material, rule the sexual relations? We are, it would appear, on the threshold of the third era, in which Love is to be abolished, or rather to be faded into a sentiment so thin that it would not be recognizable of our sturdy fathers. That stage of the cycle surely must spell decline, diminution * * * death.

"Woman's taste has been perverted by her appreciation of the gifts of man as tributes to her beauty. A man will take a thing to eat or wear or use somehow, because, whether it be bad or good, he likes it. A woman's possessions are rather the fruit of her vanity than her taste. She acquires things not because she likes them or needs them, but because they represent self-esteem, gratification, the humiliation of rivals."

LEFT OUT.

For heroes of war we are caring,
And still does the list of them swell;
The heroes of peace will be wearing
A beautiful medal as well.

But while all the others are pensioned,
We think it is really a sin,
Pray where does that class still unmentioned
The matinée hero come in?

Selection of Bull Run Site in Bad Taste —Discipline Lacking.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Does it not strike you that the holding of a sham fight on the site of battles fought in a recent civil war is not only in bad taste, but is bad policy as well?

We know that the utility of sham battles at all is much questioned, and with such very real battles as are going on from day to day the necessity for the make-believe would seem even less than usual. Yet in the face of all this, some one had the audacity to propose and carry out such a thing at such a time and such a place.

What would we think here if England elected to hold her Autumn manoeuvres on the historic site of the battle of the Boyne? The taste would be much less questionable, yet what an outcry would be raised and with how much justice.

The Southern point of view on the color question I could neither agree with nor understand, but even less can one understand their participation in a recrudescence of these battles.

Were many of my mind there would certainly be bloodshed, and it would not be on the color question either.

This view must have occurred to many I am sure, and your opinion on the matter will prove interesting to those who have so much more at stake than a

COSMOPOLITAN READER.

New York, Sept. 5, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reference to the very strained relations of the black and white troops participating in the manoeuvres at Bull Run, I beg to state how much I deplore the same. I refer primarily to the insolent and disrespectful conduct of the commissioned officers to their superiors, and, secondly, to the lack of military discipline among the men.

After quite some experience at foreign military exercises of this kind, I feel qualified to criticise these unhappy deficiencies in our army. Having noted with pleasure during the last two years the perfect running of the German imperial military machine in all its part and the excellent good feeling among the confederated army of Switzerland, in which body there is ample opportunity for hard feeling among the men, collected as they are from the twenty-two separate kantonments, between which there is the strongest jealousy, especially among the Italian, French, and German ones. Notwithstanding, the Confederated Swiss Government has used such tact and has placed over these same dangerous divisions such competent officers that the results are exceedingly gratifying, there never arising any needless and shameful outbreaks as seems likely at present at Bull Run.

I, as an American, regret exceedingly that the Government has not taken greater precautions than it has against this threatened outbreak between black and white troops at the manoeuvres. It would seem as though the army had not learned the lesson taught by the military operations at Fort Riley last year. H. C. F.

BRITISH MERCHANTS PROTEST.

Object to New United States Consular District of Liverpool.

From The London Times.

The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has adopted a memorial to Lord Lansdowne, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, with reference to a recent important alteration which has been made by the United States Government in the boundaries of the United States Consular district of Liverpool.

The memorial states that until July 1 last the American Consular district of Liverpool included such well-known places in the North and Northwest of England and Wales as Barrow, Kendal, Morecambe, Fleetwood, Preston, Wigan, St. Helens, Warrington, Widnes, Runcorn, Northwich, Winsford, and other places to the south and southwest of Liverpool as far as Aberdovey. Since then, by order of the Government of the United States, the district has been greatly reduced in area, being arbitrarily defined by that Government as lying west of a line drawn from Birkdale and Kirby, practically residential suburbs of Liverpool, thence to Frodsham, Tarporley, Shrewsbury, and Barmouth, on Cardigan Bay.

The memorial points out that the newly defined and much smaller American Consular district, excepting Liverpool, Bootle, and Birkenhead and the immediate neighborhood, had comparatively little business interest with the United States.

Notwithstanding the established volume and course of trade which must continue to come to Liverpool, the American Consul at that port now declined to certify for many invoices for shipment, and announced that the invoices must be certified in Manchester. This course the Chamber objected to on the ground of needless loss of time and money, delay and inconvenience to consignees.

Mr. Lancaster, who moved the adoption of the memorial, said that Liverpool shippers, who felt the change keenly, were entirely in the dark as to the reason for the alteration, and could only assume that it was related in some way to the Manchester Ship Canal and the desire to increase the apparent trade of Manchester with the United States. It was true that the English Board of Trade returns would not show this, although the Consular reports published by America would do so. The new American Consular district of Liverpool excluded all manufacturing towns, and the Chamber was anxious, entirely in the interests of the business community, to represent to the American Government the desirability of inquiry into the circumstances, as complete misapprehension seemed to exist on the other side of the Atlantic as to what were the real facts with reference to the Chambers.

TACTICS OF "LITTLE JAPS."

From The Russkoye Slovo.

Yes, we were greatly mistaken when we called them "little Japs." We have never before had to deal with such skillful opponents. They have included in their tactics all modern methods, strictly adapting them to their own national peculiarities. For instance, knowing the weakness of their cavalry, they never allow it to go out unsupported. There is always infantry behind it, and our cavalry often runs against it, not expecting its presence.

The Japanese reconnaissance is effected thus: A compact force of riflemen marches, sustained by screens, and patrols move about five versts ahead. At a distance of three versts the scouts are preceded by a number of Chinese. These last come to the Russian lines, examine the camp, and make signals to the Japanese concerning the whereabouts of the cavalry patrols. As the country is mountainous, they advance at the rate of seven versts a day, intrenching and fortifying every stop they take. Their path is an uninterrupted row of fortifications. Knowing the excitable, impressionable temper of their soldiers, they never pursue the enemy before settling down in good order upon the position occupied, because during a pursuit troops often become disarranged. Judging by their operations one could imagine they are the most phlegmatic and methodical people in the world—so strong in their military education and their knowledge of the art of war. They very reasonably avoid the bayonet. Their leading ranks run away to the right and left, opening the front for the fire of the succeeding lines. Running round these to the rear, they again form their ranks, thus taking the place of reserves.

If the troops uncovered are unable to stop our attack by fire, they repeat the manoeuvre. What self-control, what discipline are required in order to do this, and what a consciousness of strength! When they are on the march it is all but impossible for them to meet with any surprises. In addition to the men detached for guard, they surround their columns by chains of scouts, who advance along the crests of the elevations. Movement under such conditions may be slow, but it is sure.

POLITICAL PULPIT HYSTERICS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Counsels that darken knowledge have always been abundant, but it will not be easy, I think, to meet with a political criticism involving mental estimates wilder and less balanced than that which your reporter attributes to the Rev. Robert S. MacArthur in a recent sermon. According to the reporter's account, this public teacher embodied in his Sunday gospel address these statements concerning the President and his Secretary of State:

Now the American people know these gentlemen very well, and, without regard to political beliefs, credit them with honesty, ability, and good intentions. They also know that there are many others like them in the possession of similar qualities in our American citizenship. But what this monstrous hyperbole over the two chiefs are just now in prominent places? Even they and their blindest partisans must be sickened by such nonsensically fulsome rubbish.

It was Goethe, I believe, who said that "nothing is more depressing than enlightened ignorance;" but since he lived I think I know what is, and that is a combination of this with such epileptical pulpit hysterics as these mental estimates indicate.

A LESSON IN COURTESY.

How Thomas Jefferson Regarded a Negro's Salute.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States he was walking in the street one day when a negro bowed to him. He returned the salute. His companion said:

"What! bow to a nigger?"

Jefferson answered: "I would not have a negro surpass me in politeness."

Probably the Georgia officer at the manoeuvres of whom the TIMES reporter writes never learned this Jeffersonian lesson.

WAGES AND COST OF LIVING.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Despite the unparalleled generosity of the City of New York in building and equipping the subway for a company to operate at a present profit of many millions and a prospective profit of many millions more, we are threatened on the eve of its opening with a struggle between the company and its employes, in which the public shall be the chief sufferers, as usual.

In the statement issued by the company there is a thrice-repeated argument that it pays its elevated motormen 60 cents a day more than is paid in any other city in the country.

In no other city in the country does the wage earner have to pay out one-quarter of all his earnings for a place in which to shelter his family and to get the necessary sleep and food to enable him to work, and which may by courtesy be called his home. With the money thus exacted in taxes on real estate the city is able to build subways and give away privileges in the public streets to the transportation companies by which millions upon millions in profits are rolled up and laid away, while the wage earner is barely able to live during the period of his capacity for work, and at the end is supported by his children or by the charity of the public at large. Sequel to Motor Elopement.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—Motor elopements have strange sequels. In the village street of Charlotte, on the skirts of the Forest of Fontainebleau, a motoring monster in goggles and a bearskin carried away Mlle. Fernand Dufresne, screaming, and tore off with his fainting victim at the fourth speed. It afterward turned out that the young lady's cries and struggles were for the gallery, so to speak. She had herself preconcerted all the arrangements for her abduction with the modern Lovelace. She has now brought an action, not against her lover, but against her mother. It appears that the latter lady, since the elopement, has carried righteous indignation to the extent of leaving her daughter with positively nothing to wear. The lover, who announces her forthcoming wedding, not only has no trousseau and no jewels, but no guarantee of any kind, and would have gone unclothed but for the kindness of friends, who have lent her a few necessaries. She sues her mother for restitution of her wardrobe. So far, however, her action has failed. A Justice of the Peace has decided that the quarrel between mother and daughter does not lie within his jurisdiction.

Colossal Heavenly Body.

From The London Telegraph.

In the constellation Scorpio, seen, when visible at all, low down in our southern sky, is a star of about the first magnitude, called Antares. This object is, according to measurement of its parallax by Sir David Gill, enormously distant, and must, therefore, be a colossal body. One of our astronomers, J. E. Gore, has computed from photometric considerations, that its mass is probably 88,000 times that of the sun. As a rule, the tendency of astronomers is to doubt whether such differences as these figures imply exist among the celestial orbs; but undoubtedly the mass of Antares must be exceptional. Mr. Larkin of the Lowe Observatory, California, points out that round this great star is a wide region "about as void of stars as any known to the telescopist." Many starless fields are encountered in the heavens. "These blackened and waste areas show no stars, or, if any, they are on the extreme limit of vision, in this splendid and pure mountain air. In these dark expanses no trace of the delicate, pearl-white, shimmering background of the sidereal structure can be seen. The inference is that all the matter once in this area has been drawn in to build up the colossal sun Antares." The space has been swept clean. In the constellations Sagittarius and Scorpio there exist many black fields without either star or nebulous background.

Success.

From Puck.

With great care and much labor a caterpillar climbed up a tall spear of grass. When he reached the top, he stood on his hind end and waved his front end in the air.

"Just as I feared," said he. "Success does not bring happiness."

But then he turned and climbed down, for these caterpillars are wiser than men.

Political Status.

From Puck.

"In politics, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"H'm! Are you a point-with-pride or a view-with-alarm?"

THE SILENCES.

The outward trails that I would take
Are not so strange or far
That I need preparation make
Or wait a lucky star;
For they are just the silent ways
Beneath the watchful pines
That shade them through the sunny days
In close and faithful lines.

And though the trails that I would go
Lead many a mile away,
And though I follow till the glow
Has faded from the day,
Yet never am I lone or far,
For always do I come
To paths that breathe, to paths that are
The silences of home.

GREAT ATHLETIC FIELD READY FOR THE PUBLIC

FORMAL OPENING SATURDAY

Noteworthy Programme Planned to Celebrate the Turning Over of Park Commissioner Schmitt's Work.

The section of Pelham Bay Park in the Bronx which, under Park Commissioner William P. Schmitt, has been transformed into an extensive athletic field and is to be formally opened to the public on Saturday, was inspected yesterday by a party of citizens, including several city officials. They were personally conducted over the grounds by the Commissioner.

The idea of thus developing the park originated with Mr. Schmitt, who, since his appointment by Mayor McClellan, has worked long and hard toward the success of his venture. By canvassing among his friends he has raised $8,000 to defray the expense of the opening ceremonies.

In showing his guests about the field the Commissioner was assisted by his chief engineer, Martin Schenck. Superintendent William Wager, and M. J. Sheridan, the athlete, who is to have charge of all athletic sports in the park. Among the many attractions provided for the free use of the public are a parade ground with an area of twenty acres, an oval running track one-quarter of a mile long, a steeplechase course one mile in length, with three natural ditches and seven hurdles; three baseball fields, cricket and croquet grounds, several tennis courts, bowling alleys, vaulting and hammer throwing grounds, and a large open area for picnic parties.

In the centre of the field is a spacious grand stand. At the west of this is a wide stretch of smooth land completely inclosed by trees. This plot will be devoted to lacrosse and pushball games. On the water's edge have been erected a long series of bathhouses and a commodious boathouse, where rowboats may be obtained upon the payment of a small fee.

A feature of the Commissioner's plans is the erection within the grounds of a Red Cross emergency tent where persons injured in the park may be promptly treated. This hospital is provided with medicines and a full set of surgical instruments, and will be constantly in charge of an experienced physician and surgeon. Several who have received minor injuries in the park have already been treated there, and the Commissioner believes that this will be a valuable adjunct of the place.

Just beyond the bathing houses and situated on the bank of the bay is a rustic summerhouse where two-score of people may sit and survey all sides of the field as well as the expanse of water to the eastward. The entire athletic field comprises 120 acres, and it was stated that $17,500 has already been expended by the present administration leveling th ground and putting the park in its present condition.

Among the Commissioner's guests yesterday was President John R. Van Wormer of the New York Athletic Club, who expressed himself as highly pleased with what had been done.

Saturday's exercises will include a military parade, in which the Eighth Regiment, two battalions of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, the First and Second Batteries, several posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, Squadron A., the naval veterans, and 3,000 marchers from various civic societies in the Bronx will participate. Nine bands will head the divisions of this procession, and will accompany 1,000 singers from the German and United Singing Societies. Mayor McClellan has promised to be present and to make an address. Several others will speak.

Provisions have been made for the entertainment of from 25,000 to 30,000 persons.

The grounds may be reached by trains of the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad, Harlem River branch, from the elevated station at East One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street; by elevated trains to Pelham Avenue, and thence by stage, and by all trolley lines running north to Pelham Avenue.

P. R. R. SHOPS ON FULL TIME.

Order Benefits 20,000 Men Employed in Various Cities.

Special to The New York Times.

ALTOONA, Penn., Sept. 7.—Orders were issued from the office of R. N. Durborow, Superintendent of Motive Power of the Pennsylvania Railroad here, for the company shops to go on full time, fifty-five hours a week, with a half-holiday on Saturday. They apply to all the shops under Superintendent Durborow's control, including those at Pittsburg, Altoona, Harrisburg, and West Philadelphia.

About 20,000 men will get the benefit of the increased working time. Since Spring many of them have been working but thirty-two hours a week. Recently, sixteen hours a week was in vogue.

HUSBAND LIKES HOUSEWORK.

But Wife Objects to Supporting Family —Court Upholds Her.

"My husband will not work," said Mrs. Dexter. "He prefers to stop at home, look after the baby, and attend to the housework, while I have to go out and do washing to support the family. I'm tired of that arrangement and I want a change."

Dexter said he was willing to work, but could find nothing to do. He was required to give a bond to pay his wife $4 a week.

PROF. KELLER DIES ON SHIP.

German Scholar Succumbs to Heart Disease Returning from Europe.

Prof. I. Keller, prominently known in literary and educational circles in this city, and who for the past ten years had been a member of the Faculty of Normal College in the capacity of Professor of German Language and Literature, died Aug. 29 on the steamer Pennsylvania while returning to this country from a Summer vacation spent in touring Europe. Heart trouble was the cause of death.

Prof. Keller was born in Pinne, Germany, in 1844, and educated in the Berlin University. He came to this country in 1868, and from 1871 to 1878 was a member of the Faculty of the Hoboken Academy. He resigned to become President of the German-American Seminary in Milwaukee, Wis. Returning to this city several years later, Prof. Keller was appointed President of the German-American School of the Nineteenth Ward, and in 1893 accepted a professorship in Normal College, which position he held at the time of his death. A widow and two sons survive him.

LEAVES LANDLORD $25,000.

Harlem Storekeeper Residuary Legatee Under Eccentric Woman's Will.

The will of Mrs. Emma M. C. King, who died on May 25 at 2,160 Seventh Avenue, where she had led an eccentric existence for many years, was filed in the office of the Surrogate for probate yesterday.

Under its provisions John Hepy, a storekeeper at the same address, who had been Mrs. King's landlord and general benefactor, is made residuary legatee, and will receive about $25,000. Her entire estate amounts to some $30,000, all of which is in cash in various banks. A specific bequest of $2,000 is made in the will to St. Aloysius's Catholic Church, and several others to persons whom Mrs. King met while traveling in Italy years ago.

CHUGGED INTO SUBWAY.

Edna's and Charlotte's Final Dash on the Kerosene Horse.

A runabout automobile chugged merrily down Broadway last night. It contained two young women, one of whom manipulated the puff-stick. At Fiftieth Street the fair chauffeur said:

"Edna, let's explore the subway!"

"Oh, joy!" said Charlotte.

A turn of the puffstick, and biff! the automobile crashed into the iron depot house. The two young women were thrown out.

"Goodness!" screamed Edna, "what was that for?"

"Is my hat on straight?" asked Charlotte, coolly.

"I'm not used to driving kerosene horses," she added, in half apology.

"What's to be done?" asked Edna. "See what's happened to Fred's bubble. He'll be awful mad. Oh, what's to be done?"

"Why, scoot!" said Charlotte, marveling at the other's lack of intuition.

Policeman Judge of Forty-seventh Street came to inquire.

An hour later "Fred" arrived. He stuck his hands deep in his pockets as he surveyed the wreck of the automobile.

"Say," he asked Policeman Judge, "what's your opinion of women, anyway?"

Judge refrained.

"I drove those girls through the Park," continued "Fred." "Bought 'em lunch, ices—Lord knows what not. Passing through Fifty-ninth I told 'em t'sit still while I dropped in to see a friend at the club. Now look!"

Judge looked. The rest was silence, broken at length by the rumbling arrival of an express wagon.

FAIR REUNION AT WEDDING.

Mayor Bill Smith Gave Rocker to Bride Whom Tragedy Enriched.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 7.—Miss Mabel E. Lefler, a niece of the late Mrs. Charles L. Fair, was married to George Thomas Whitley at the home of her uncle, Abram Nelson, in Newmarket this evening. The bride is reputed to possess a fortune of $500,000, which came to her through the settlement of the Fair-Nelson litigation. The bridegroom is a machinist employed in a local shop. He met his bride while he was on the Newmarket baseball nine, of which Abram Nelson is Captain, three years ago.

The wedding was the occasion for the first reunion of the Nelson Smith family for many years. Chales G. Smith, one of Mrs. Fair's brothers, coming from Bolder, Col., to attend the event. J. E. Chandler of New York, who was the lawyer for Mrs. Hannah Nelson, grandmother of the bride, sent a chest of silverware. Mayor Bill Smith gave the bride a rocker. The Rev. Henry A. Pearce of New York was best man, Miss Martha C. Bunnell of Union, N. J., maid of honor, and Miss Dorothy Bunnell of Union and Miss Hanna Nelson of Newmarket were bridesmaids. All are cousins of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitley left to-night for Boston, where they will spend their honeymoon. Mrs. Whitley was educated at Mrs. Fair's expense, and just before her death the latter gave her a house in Newmarket which the couple will occupy as a residence. The bride formerly taught in the public schools of Boston.

SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY HERE.

Chemist Principal Figure in Distinguished Party of Visiting Scientists.

Sir William Ramsay, who is in New York at the head of a British delegation of scientists to attend a series of international conferences this month, was the guest of honor at an informal reception last night at the Chemists' Club, 108 West Fifty-fifth Street. The rooms were thronged with members of the local section of the Society of Chemical Industry. Sir William is President of the general organization, and was cordially welcomed. The clubrooms were decorated with a blend of the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack. The distinguished Englishmen who accompanied Sir William across the Atlantic were present, with their wives.

There were no speeches, but a great deal of highly scientific talk. Among the notable scientists present were Prof. Oscar Leprecht of the University of Berlin, Prof. Ostwald of the University of Leipsic, Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, Prof. Charles F. Chandler of Columbia, and Prof. Wiley, who is making food experiments for the United States Government.

Arrangements have been made to keep the visitors busy until they leave New York on their western tour Monday morning. This morning there will be a general council at Havemeyer Hall, Columbia University, to be followed by a general meeting of the society in the university gymnasium. Sir William Ramsay will deliver an address on various methods of teaching practical science. A feature of the occasion will be the presentation of a gold medal to Prof. Ira Remsen. After luncheon at the Claremont, the visitors will be taken for an automobile ride through the city. In the evening the annual dinner of the society will be held at the Waldorf.

Friday and Saturday will be devoted to visiting a number of manufacturing establishments in New York, Newark, and on Long Island. To-morrow evening there will be a reception on the roof garden of the Majestic Hotel, and on Saturday evening a smoker in Liederkranz Hall. Sunday will be devoted to an excursion up the Hudson.

WILL NOT JOIN FEDERATION.

Bricklayers and Masons Vote Against Gompers's Organization.

It was announced yesterday that the locals of the Journeymen Bricklayers and Masons' International Union in New York and other cities, have for a second time voted against joining the American Federation of Labor. This decision is final and means that the American Federation of Labor will lose an increase in membership of 125,000, which it expected to get.

The proposition to join the American Federation of Labor was made to the bricklayers unions about a year ago and was put to a referendum vote and turned down.

NOTES OF THE THEATRES.

Edward E. Rice has completed the cast of "Mr. Wix of Wickham," which will open at the Bijou Sept. 19. Harry Carson Clarke is the leading comedian. Others in the company are Sydney de Gray, Julian Ettinge, Thelma Fair, Arthur Wooley, Douglas Flint, and Andrew O'Neill.

***

Charles Frohman announces that his next four productions in New York will be Pinero's "Letty," with William Faversham, next Monday, at the Hudson; "Business Is Business," with William Crane, at the Criterion, Sept. 19; "The Coronet of the Duchess," with Mrs. Bloodgood, at the Garrick, Sept. 21, and "The Sorceress," with Mrs. Pat Campbell, at the Herald Square, Oct. 3.

***

Stage Manager Gus Sohlke has introduced a "setting up" drill into "The Isle of Spice." It has proved very effective.

***

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, who produced their new play "Taps" for the first time last Monday night in Trenton, N. J., are to come to New York for a week's run at the Lyric Theatre on Sept. 19. "The Royal Chef," now playing at the Lyric and which came here from Chicago, will return at once to that city. The Messrs. Shubert have invited the Democratic editors in conference at the Waldorf to attend the performance of "The Royal Chef" to-night in a body.

***

Blanche Bates, now playing in "The Darling of the Gods" in St. Louis, will reach her fiftieth performance Monday. The Japanese drama has broken all previous St. Louis records.

***

The American Bankers' Association, which will meet in convention in this city next week, has bought out the New Amsterdam Theatre for Thursday night, Sept. 15, and no seats will be on sale to the public at the box office for that night. The attraction at the theatre is the "Rogers Brothers in Paris."

WON'T HAVE COPPER IN WATER AT WASHINGTON

Health Officer Woodward Skeptical About Dr. Moore's Theory.

CONSIDERS PLAN DANGEROUS

Dr. Moore Insists That Copper Sulphate Is a Safe and Certain Destroyer of Typhoid Bacilli.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—Notwithstanding there are fifty places where copper has been, or is soon to be used, against typhoid germs in water, the controversy over its use with safety to human life has broken out afresh by the declaration of Dr. Woodward, the Health Officer of Washington, that he does not regard it safe to treat the reservoirs of this city with copper.

Dr. Woodward has refused to order that boats be rowed over the reservoirs dragging bags containing blue vitriol at the stern. He says it would be dangerous to the health of the 350,000 people who drink the Potomac water, which is supposed to be charged with the bacteria of typhoid from sewerage at Mount Savage, Md., where for several weeks there has been an epidemic of typhoid.

Dr. George T. Moore, the discoverer of the copper sulphate remedy, when questioned to-day as to what weight was to be placed on the refusal of Dr. Woodward, asked to be excused from criticising the health officer.

"I am willing to talk about the use of copper as a bacteriacide," said Dr. Moore, "but Dr. Woodward is entitled to his opinion, and he no doubt thinks he is right. In this case our opinion differs from his. We hold firmly to our original belief that copper sulphate is a certain and safe germicide in the presence of typhoid bacilli. We have proved what we affirm.

"Under proper conditions typhoid fever in any community, so far as the disease is caused by polluted drinking water, may be successfully combatted by the scientific use of copper. Copper can be successfully used in reservoirs, and there is no use allowing water to remain contaminated with typhoid bacteria when it can be thus disinfected."

Dr. Moore states that in his opinion much of the so-called copper poisoning is not such, but ptomaine poisoning, caused by the presence of ptomaines in the accumulations that occur on copper cooking vessels. The change from copper to enameled ware was, he says, not so much for the sake of health as because the latter ware is cheaper than copper. There have been many cases of poisoning from the use of enameled ware, as such material contains a certain amount of arsenic and lead.

A number of physicians in Washington, Dr. Moore says, use copper in their practice for intestinal troubles, with good results. The Chinese use copper kettles to keep out the "cholera devil." The employes of copper mills are said to be immune from typhoid. Some years ago, when typhoid was epidemic in Indianapolis, copper sulphate was used as a disinfectant, and with excellent results.

"Copper is not poisonous," says Dr. Moore. "There has never yet been produced an authentic case of copper poisoning."

He has an enormous mass of correspondence on the subject of his theory. Many are reports of the use of the solution. The health officer of Butte, Mon., where the authorities are treating algae in the water with copper, writes:

"For the first time in ten years the water is absolutely pure which was turned into the city mains. We had quick results. The trouble from vegetable organisms in our reservoirs dates back to 1890, and we have gone to enormous expense trying to eradicate the evil. We feel grateful to the Department of Agriculture for doing in two weeks, at an expense of less than $200, what we have been trying to do for the past fourteen years at the cost of many thousands of dollars."

Another report states that the water in a Maryland school reservoir of 10,000,000 gallons was successfully treated with copper.

Dr. Lucien M. Saloman of New Orleans writes that for a number of years he has been using a salt of copper in the treatment of typhoid fever, with successful results.

BALLINGTON BOOTHS RETURN.

Didn't See Gen. Booth—Mrs. Booth on English Prisons.

Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth and their children, Charles B. Booth and Theodora Booth, were passengers on the steamship Majestic, which arrived here yesterday afternoon from Liverpool. They have been away since early July, and have visited England, Switzerland, France, and Germany. On the return trip Mr. and Mrs. Booth and their son were very seasick.

"We went away with the idea of obtaining a complete rest," said Mrs. Booth. "I had for years planned a voyage which we might take as a family in private and without show. We have had it, and now we are glad to be back in our own country once more."

Mr. Booth said that he had not met his father, Gen. Booth, and that a distance of several hundred miles was always between them. Mr. Booth also said that the Volunteers of America, of which he is the head, will make a report to him at a big meeting of welcome to be held at the Cooper Square headquarters some night next week.

Mrs. Booth said that for a month she had been "homesick for her boys in the prisons," and that as soon as the October reunions were over she would start on her round of prison visits.

"I was invited," she said, "to visit a number of the English prisons, but did not accept any of the invitations. I learned that there are no women visitors allowed in the prisons, and that there is no organization that makes any effort to give the prisoners religious instruction. The English prison system is far behind ours, and is greatly in need of attention."

THEODORE ROSEVELT PARKER.

Has One "O" Less Than President's Name—Wants Navy Appointment.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The Bureau of Navigation to-day received a request from Representative Bell of the Second Congressional District of California for the enlistment in the navy and assignment to the battleship Ohio of one of his constituents named Theodore Rosevelt Parker.

The applicant, it appears, really bears the name of Theodore Rosevelt Parker, and it was not recently assumed, as is shown by the fact that the records of the Marine Corps disclose his enlistment under that name at Seattle, Washington, July 12, 1901. Parker was born in San Francisco and was a machinist when he enlisted in the Marine Corps. His father bore the same name.

It is said that the family is a branch of an old Pennsylvania family of Rosevelts, not connected in any way with that of President Roosevelt. Representative Bell's request will be granted.

WOULD CONTROL ELEVATORS.

Superintendent Hopper Seeks Further Power for His Bureau.

Isaac A. Hopper, Superintendent of Buildings, has announced that he will petition the Board of Aldermen to give his bureau greater powers in regard to the control of elevators, and will submit an amendment to the existing laws, which has been drawn up after consultation with leading builders and owners of large buildings.

This seeks to extend the Superintendent's supervision over freight as well as passenger elevators, and includes regulations to cover the installation, alteration, and operation of elevators as well as their inspection. It will also require all persons operating elevators to be registered at the bureau.

EYE-BAR CABLE CONTROVERSY.

Best's Opponents Hear of Plan to Take Snap Judgment.

Members of the art societies and civic organizations opposed to Commissioner Best's plan to substitute wire cables for eye-bar cables on the new Manhattan Bridge are anxious over what they say is a scheme to rush through the amended Best project at a poorly attended meeting of the Municipal Art Commission on Tuesday next.

The Lindenthal supporters, or those who say the Best substitution plan is a Tammany trick, expect many of the Municipal Art Commissioners to be absent from the meeting. They point out that Mayor McClellan, John D. Crimmins, and Mr. Best may be a majority of a quorum of five and vote through the wire cable proposition against the two remaining attendants, John De Witt Warner, President of the commission, however, said yesterday that he had no information to the effect that only five would be on hand.

"I rather think there may be more," he said.

It is asserted by the anti-Best side of the controversy that a majority of the Art Commissioners really favor a report from expert engineers on the substitute plan, just such a report as they received before they approved Mr. Lindenthal's original plans for the eye-bar construction. Mr. Best, they say, while he has given a general outline of his plans, wants the commission to approve them without furnishing details, and they fear that the approval of the new scheme will be followed immediately by the awarding of several valuable contracts to Tammany men. The charge is made that the Roebling Company is at the bottom of the latest plan and that Richard and Frank Croker, aided by Charles F. Murphy, are at the bottom of the Roebling concern.

The contracts for the anchorages of the bridge will amount to about $2,000,000. When Commissioner Best was asked about the matter he said:

"Made out of whole cloth. This matter has been postponed in order to give the Municipal Art Commission due time to consider it. I haven't even been notified about the meeting you mention. There is no reason for any one to absent himself through ignorance, as all of them know this matter is hanging fire."

SOCIETY CHARITY GYMKHANA.

Lawn Sports at R. C. Dixey's Place in Lenox Aids Hospital.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Sept. 7.—At Tanglewood, Richard C. Dixey's country residence, this afternoon the first gymkhana before Lenox society was held in the aid of a hospital for convalescents which is conducted by Miss Ethel Folsom of New York at Lee. It was a notable gathering, and the fact that the British Ambassador, his secretaries, Miss Josephine Durand, and well-known New York society men and women took part attracted fully six hundred to the events. The receipts from the games will reach $1,000.

The programme opened with a thread-and-needle race, in which men rode. They were assisted by ladies, who threaded a needle and sewed on buttons, after which the riders remounted and finished the run. David T. Dana of New York was first, Oswald Chew of New York second, and Joseph W. Burden third. This opening number was followed by women riders tilting at a ring. Miss Constance Parsons, daughter of John E. Parsons of New York, was first and Miss Charlotte Barnes, daughter of Capt. John S. Barnes of New York, second. Miss Cornelia Barnes, Miss Josephine Durand, Miss Nora Iasigi, Miss Helen Alexandre, Miss Kate Cary, Miss Rosamond Dixey, Miss Evelyn Sloane, Miss Heloise Meyer, and Mrs. Samuel Frothingham also rode in this event.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The wedding of Miss Frances Campbell and Singleton Van Schaick will take place to-day at West Orange. ***

Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Thacher have gone to Bar Harbor for a few days. They are at the Malvern Hotel.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Lycurgus Winchester have left Bar Harbor and have gone to Baltimore for the Autumn. Mrs. Winchester was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt.

THE NEWS OF NEWPORT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Sept. 7.—The most important function to-day was the entertainment given by Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Thomas at Stoneacre. This comprised a dinner, vaudeville, and dance. There were 150 guests and a temporary structure had been built covering the entire length of the western piazza, in which to entertain them. The floral decorations were elaborate. In the ballroom laurel and oak boughs completely hid the temporary structure. Throughout the house there were hanging baskets and plaques of American Beauties, thousands of miniature electric lights, half hidden among the leaves, giving birilliancy to the scene.

Miss Leary gave a luncheon to-day in honor of Mrs. William F. Sheehan; Mrs. Joseph E. Widener entertained at luncheon in honor of Mrs. H. K. Bloodgood at the Pinard cottage, and Mrs. E. Livingston Ludlow gave a reception.

P. F. Collier and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish gave dinners at Berger's and Mrs. T. Shaw Safe. Mrs. Charles M. Bull, Mrs. S. E. Huntington, Mrs. Francis O. French, and Mrs. Thomas Newbold gave dinners at their cottages.

WHO WANTS TO ADOPT A PEERLESS KITTEN?

ALL HE WANTS IS $2,000

If there is a man or woman of stainless reputation within the confines of New York who is yearning to adopt a "Maltese female tiger kitten of unique beauty," the yearning may be assuaged for only $2,000.

S. Lamberti Norchese of 77 Perry Street, who prefixes his name with "Professor," offers the opportunity, insisting only that the applicant for the honor of rearing the kitten and enjoying its society after it reaches cathood possess a character above reproach and a home in Manhattan. The professor took the public into his confidence yesterday by means of the following advertisement which appeared in an afternoon paper:

FOR A CONSIDERATION OF NOT LESS THAN two thousand ($2,000) dollars I would give away, to a nice party, for adoption only, my thoroughbred Maltese female tiger kitten, of unique beauty, seven weeks old; agents or dealers need not apply.

A reporter found Prof. Norchese yesterday in the basement of the Perry Street house, where he conducts a barber's shop. He was engaged in washing the windows, and mildly resented interruption. When questioned as to the advertisement he was positively indignant.

"My announcement," he declared, severely, "speaks for itself. There is nothing more to be said until I have seen your references. I have the little tiger cat, and if you can satisfy me as to your moral qualifications and oblige me with the $2,000 you may adopt her, provided that you live in New York. I could not permit her to be taken to any other city, and I warn you that you need not think of buying her outright. I would not consider such a thing. I have never sold a pet, and could not now, but my financial condition at the present moment is so embarrassing that I am forced partially to disregard my desires and agree to part with Natalie. Agents and dealers, however, are barred. I will not tolerate them. She must have a private home."

The professor paused and carefully combed out a few kinks in his great mustache. Finally he walked to the rear of the shop and took an enormous butcher's knife from a drawer. He ran his finger along its edge, testing its keenness.

"Are you an agent or a dealer?" he demanded of his visitor, as he began to whet the weapon. A denial was hastily entered, but he whetted all the harder. Natalie, the $2,000 tiger kitten, appeared.

"It is her dinner bell, the sharpening of the knife," he explained. "I always feed her on raw liver. Meat would be too heavy for her little stomach. She was asleep. She always sleeps between 2 o'clock and 4 in the afternoon, and I did not like to awaken her. It is her custom, and I did not like at first to wake her. She does not look her best when suddenly aroused from slumber. She is not bright of eye nor lithe of movement."

The professor put his knife away.

"Two thousand dollars," he complained, "is a ridiculously small figure to fix for giving Natalie up, but I must have money. There is not another cat in all the world so beautiful as she. There is the regularity of the tiger marking to the smallest detail. There is the perfect cross of Maltese upon her back. She is peerless. Would that I might keep her always, but my finances are terribly depleted. I must sacrifice my feelings. She is pedigreed, ah! how nobly! Had I not another kitten I would never consent to give her up. The other kitten is not a tiger-kitten. She does not eat like a tiger, and she has not the cross of Maltese on her back, but she is a good mouser."

The professor then excused himself to groom Natalie for visitors.

BELIEVES BOY KIDNAPPED.

Ernest Siegel Reports Disappearance of Twelve-Year-Old Son.

Twelve-year-old William Siegel of 69 East Ninety-eighth Street has been missing since last Thursday evening, and his father, Ernest Siegel, who reported his disappearance to the police yesterday, believes that he was kidnapped. The father says a strange boy about nineteen years old, struck up a conversation with the lad and then led him away from the stoop where he was sitting with his parents.

No demand for a ransom or threatening letters have been received, and Abe Dresser of 58 East One Hundred and Thirty-second Street, a friend of the family, is positive that he saw the boy alone making his way through the rush-hour throng at the Manhattan entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge two days later.

CONOR O'KELLY GOES BACK.

Feeling for Ireland in America Has Impressed Him.

Conor O'Kelly, the Irish member of Parliament who has been in this country for several weeks in the interests of the United Irish League, sailed for home yesterday on the White Star Line steamship Baltic. Mr. O'Kelly, who toured the country from coast to coast in the interest of the league, was well pleased with the results of his trip. He delivered over one hundred addresses.

"I have made many friends in this country," he said, "and I am going home to continue the fight for Ireland. The league is spreading, and I have been delighted with the way the friends of the cause are helping with the work in this country."

WILL OF WILLIAM WYMAN.

Baltimore Churches Made Beneficiaries —$1,000 Each to Negro Servants.

The will of William Wyman, who died recently in Baltimore, was filed for probate in the Surrogate's office here yesterday, a large portion of the Wyman property being in New York State. After making bequests of $5,000 to each of his nephews and nieces, the testator leaves $1,000 to each of his negro servants, there being three of these mentioned in the will.

To St. John's Church, at Huntingdon, Baltimore, the testator leaves $10,000, to be used as a trust fund, the income of which is to be applied to the payment of the pastor's salary; $5,000 is left as a trust fund to pay the salary of the organist of the church, and $5,000 to the support of St. John's Orphanage. To Grace Church, in Baltimore, the sum of $10,000 is bequeathed with the request that it be used to pay off the ground rent of the church parsonage. The sum of $5,000 is left unconditionally to St. Stephen's Church, at Pittsfield, N. H.

All of the residuary estate is to go to the testator's daughter, Helen St. Prie Wyman Rollins.

Funeral of Dr. Herman Baar.

Funeral services were held yesterday morning for Dr. Herman Baar, former Superintendent of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, at the institution, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue. The services were conducted by Dr. Rudolph J. Coffee, who succeeded Dr. Baar when he resigned through ill-health several years ago. All of the inmates of the asylum, numbering in all about 1,000 children, participated in the services. The body was accorded full military honors, as Dr. Baar established a military band and cadet corps in the asylum, and a detachment of the cadet corps accompanied the body to Salem Fields.

Ex-Senator Wolcott Back.

Ex-Senator E. O. Wolcott of Colorado arrived here last night on the steamship Majestic from Liverpool. He went away in June to take the waters at Carlsbad. He said that he was restored in health, and was ready now to take an active part in the campaign.

IN THE SHOPS.

Here is something brand new in a cut-glass dish that the woman who likes dainty things for the table will be glad to welcome. This is an individual mushroom dish, with a bell cover. It is a low, shallow dish, attractively cut and with little ears on either side, the high bell cover plain and with a silver knob at the top. They are exceedingly pretty dishes and cost $76.50 a dozen. They may be more elaborate and may cost more. The bell, for instance, may be engraved with mushrooms, or it is delightful to have a monogram upon it. The bell tops can be bought for $48 a dozen.

***

Another individual service dish which is a delight is for the oyster cocktail. The oysters and the dressing are served separately. With this service every man or woman is his or her own cocktail mixer. It is much more satisfactory than the usual method. There is a cut-glass plate, in the centre of which is set a small, rather low-stemmed glass. The oysters are served on the half shell on cracked ice in the plate, which has rather a high rim, and the dressing is in the small glass in the centre. With an oyster fork each oyster is dipped in the dressing and given as much or as little as may be desired. The idea of the oysters on the half shell and showing their absolute freshness is very agreeable. Together the plate and dish cost $90 a dozen, and separate each $45 a dozen.

***

Here is another most attractive little piece of glass, or rather a set of whisky glasses and jug. The glasses are the interesting features of the set. They are plain, with a line cut around a little less than half way up the glass. Above that are engraved the corpulent proportions of a pig. Drink to the line and it is well enough, but above it—well, his porcine fatness is commentary enough. A single glass costs $1.50, a dozen $15, and the jug, which also bears the figure of a pig, costs $6.75.

***

An orange set comes in a case, and is pretty and useful. In the upper part of the case is the dish, cut glass, pretty and boat-shape, not unduly large, and beneath, in the case, is a drawer in which are a dozen silver, gold-bowled orange spoons. The set costs $35.

***

It is in liquor sets of various kinds that some of the best work in glass is to be seen. A whisky set of the rock crystal order has the designs which are called sculptured. They are only translucent upon the transparent glass. A jug has a woodland scene showing toads and mushrooms, with ferns, while the ferns are reproduced upon the glasses.

***

Cocktail glasses, with the cock upon the outside, to specialize them, have been seen. These are of plain glass, with only the bird on the outside, with tall stems and after the design of hock glasses.

***

A Scotch highball set is composed of two quart bottles with silver stopples, six tall highball glasses, six small glasses, a tray, and silver coaster, altogether costing $55. There are various sentiments upon the different glasses—"Drink Hearty," "Happy Days," "My Regards," "Here's Fun," &c.

***

Rock crystal glasses of all sizes come done in a strawberry design. The goblets are $60 a dozen, and the other glasses, wine glasses of all kinds, with sherbet cups and saucers and finger bowls, range up or down in price, according to size.

***

Nothing is prettier, however, in the way of glasses, than those of plain crystal, with cut stems, the glass a graceful bell shape. The upper part, from the goblet down to the smallest glasses, is in the same form. These glasses frequently have monograms upon them.

***

China with a silver deposit design around the edge is new and attractive. There are cups, saucers, and plates, and, while white china is most frequently used, the colored is also seen. The designs may be made to order. Teacups and saucers, with the silver deposit in elaborate design, cost $90 a dozen, service and soup plates the same, while entree and smaller plates cost $75.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Maria a'Becket.

Maria a'Becket, an artist whose work is widely and favorably known, died at St. Vincent's Hospital Tuesday morning from heart disease. Miss a'Becket was born in Portland, Me. She inherited an aptitude for painting from her father, from whom she received her early guidance in art. She afterward studied with William Morris Hunt in Boston, and later with Daubigny, in France. Miss a'Becket was active in the work of various societies connected with the Catholic Church, to which faith she was a convert. The burial service will be private and will take place from St. Vincent's Hospital at 9 o'clock this morning.

Obituary Notes.

Mrs. MARY WHITING BRYANT, wife of William Cullen Bryant, editor of The Brooklyn Times, died late Tuesday at Marbledale, Litchfield County, Conn., where she had gone for her health. Mrs. Bryant was thirty-seven years of age.

Mrs. MARY E. POST, widow of Henry G. Post, died suddenly last night at her residence, 25 Park Street, Orange. Mrs. Post was seventy-eight years old. Her husband died last year, and a daughter, Miss Minnie Post, a few weeks ago. Mrs. Post is survived by three children—Mrs. John Stites, Henry L. Post, and Mrs. Philip Van Riper.

CHOICES TOOK FOUR RACES

Tradition with Top Weight Beat Handzarra a Head for the Belles Stakes at Sheepshead Bay.

Head finishes and thrilling races lasted straight through the programme at the Sheepshead Bay track yesterday, but, good as was the sport from first to last, one contest, the mile and three furlongs of the September Stakes, stood out conspicuously as the real event of the afternoon. Beldame, the best of her sex and age that the American turf has known in many years, was returned the winner, and, though the wonderful flight of speed that the gallant Belmont-bred filly possesses made the trial a hollow thing at the end, the enthusiasm that her victory aroused was all the greater for the style in which she won.

Many and brilliant as have been Beldame's successes this season, her best and most impressive race was that of yesterday, when, with full weight up, she met the best three-year-old of the season, Ort Wells, on exactly even terms, and beat him most soundly over a distance of ground that tried her staying powers as well as her speed. Six horses originally were named to run, but Garnish and Ormonde's Right were withdrawn, and the contest thus narrowed down to a duel between the best colt and the best filly of the season among the three-year-olds. Beldame went back in the betting to 7 to 5 from 9 to 10 at one point, and started at 6 to 5, backed by the form followers and the public alone.

The start at the head of the quarter-stretch was made after quite a long delay at the post, Graziallo breaking first and racing on with Beldame at his heels, while Ocean Tide, fourth at the start, was rushed to the front at once and made an effort to go out and set the pace for her stable mate. When Ocean Tide went on, Graziallo dropped back and permitted Beldame and Ort Wells to pass him, the crack colt and filly then rating on head and head behind Ocean Tide, with Beldame on the rail. The order was the same past the stand the first time and around the paddock turn, O'Neil on Beldame holding the mare under a strong pull for that distance and giving the spectators the impression that for the first time in any of her races this season he was trying to place the filly. The watchers had barely formed the idea that Beldame was to run a waiting race, however, than as the field swung into the backstretch O'Neil eased the filly, and with the rush of a meteor she shot out and went to the front, passing Ocean Tide like a flash. As Beldame moved Ort Wells went on after her, but he never was able to get near her, the first effort of the filly carrying the others so fast that she practically had them beaten in the next quarter of a mile. After her impetuous rush into the lead Beldame was steadied again and settled down to a big swinging gallop, but it was fast enough to keep the three behind her extended to the limit of their powers, and from that point to the end Beldame was only galloping in front.

In the race for the Belles Stakes, five and a half furlongs, for fillies two years old, the Flatbush Stakes winner Tradition had set for her a task that tried her powers to the extreme, as, with top weight, she met a fast lot of horses and was handicapped by an accident at the start, a stumble just as the barrier rose, throwing her back to the rear and causing Lyne, who rode her, to draw his feet out of the stirrups. In the meantime the fast Handzarra went in flying and took a big lead. When Tradition recovered her stride Lyne sent her after the leader and closed gradually, though he had to draw his whip just as the horses entered the stretch. From there on he rode hard, and Tradition, closing with a splendid burst of speed and dauntless courage in the last half furlong, got up to Handzarra in the very last jump of the race and won by a short nose. WEIGHTS FOR GREAT EASTERN.

Tradition and Sysonby Equal Top Weights for Big Handicap.

The weights for the Great Eastern Handicap, the oldest and most famous of the big open events for two-year-olds, have been announced by Handicapper W. S. Vosburgh. Tradition, which was second for the Futurity, is made the actual top weight, as she is in with 128 pounds, thus making the concession of her sex allowance to Sysonby, which was third for the Futurity, and which is weighted with 128 pounds also. The Futurity winner, Artful, is handicapped at 125 pounds, while Tanya, the fourth horse in the Futurity, is in at 123. The handicap in full follows:

Grand Circuit Harness Races.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 7.—More good racing was seen to-day at the third day of the Grand Circuit meet at Charter Oak Park. The most interesting race of the day was for the Connecticut Stake of $2,500, the first on the card. A surprise was furnished when the favorite, Morning Star, was beaten. He was barred in the pools and, although he captured the first two heats, it was evident that McPherson, driving Angus Pointer, did not let the horse out. A shift of drivers was made, Andrews taking McPherson's place behind Angus Pointer. The change was noticeable at once and the son of Sidney Pointer-Jane pranced home a winner in the three following heats. Summary:

Major Delmar Ties Trotting Record.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 7.—Major Delmar only succeeded in tying the world's trotting record of 2:02¼ without wind shield in his attempt this afternoon, the feature of the day's races at the New York State Fair. More than 15,000 persons saw the trial, the conditions for which were perfect. The Major, accompanied by a runner, trotted the first quarter in 30 seconds, the half in 1:00, the three-quarters in 1:31¼, and the mile in 2:02¼.

All of the races were won in straight heats.

PRETTY POLLY CANTERS HOME.

LONDON, England, Sept. 7.—Pretty Polly won the St. Leger Stakes of 25 sovereigns each, for three-year-olds, about one mile and six furlongs, at Doncaster, to-day. Henry I. was second and Alms Cliff was third. Six horses started.

Pretty Polly's win of the St. Leger Stakes makes her fourteenth successive victory. The filly has never yet been beaten. She has again defeated the Derby winner, St. Amant, who was not placed in to-day's race. The latter led until five furlongs from home, when Pretty Polly drew to the front and won in a canter by three lengths. Six lengths separated the second and third horses.

The betting was 5 to 2 on Pretty Polly, 50 to 1 against Henry I., and 100 to 6 against Alms Cliff.

New York Fencers Beaten.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 7.—In the Olympic amateur fencing championship Ramon Fonst of Havana, Cuba, proved himself invincible in every event in which he participated at the World's Fair Stadium to-day. He won the championship in the senior foil competition, and in the international team foil contest won all three of his bouts. He also won with the dueling swords. Summary:

Senior Foils.—Won by Ramon Fonst; A. V. Z. Fost, New York, second; Charles Tatham, New York, third.

Junior Foils.—Won by A. G. Fox, Chicago; Theodore Carstens, Chicago, second; W. J. Holroyde, Pittsburg, third.

Dueling Swords.—Won by Fonst; Aatham, second; Fost, third.

TEN STRAIGHT FOR WILTSE

AMERICANS WERE SHUT OUT

Brooklyn Was Successful Over Boston by 6 to 2—Washington Took Another Fall Out of the Champions.

No changes occurred in the standing of the teams in either of the major leagues yesterday. The New York Nationals increased their lead by defeating the Philadelphia team, making the tenth straight victory for Pitcher Wiltse and the twelfth consecutive victory for his team. The Greater New Yorks were shut out by the Athletics, but they retained the leading position in the American League because the Champions lost one game of a double-header with Washington. At Boston the Brooklyns managed to win by a score of 6 to 2. Summary follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Have Batting Streak and Philadelphians Are Beaten 6 to 3.

The leaders and tailenders of the National League began a series of seven games at the Polo Grounds yesterday, and, as usual, in the meetings between the two teams this year, the New Yorks were successful by a score of 6 to 3.

The Philadelphias' first run was due to a combination of mistakes. Four bad balls placed Thomas on first, and he reached second on Dunn's failure to field Gleason's hit. Then Wolverton hit to McGann, who threw wild to second to catch Gleason. With the bases filled, McGee placed a bounding hit into McGann's hands, who put the runner out, and on McGann's throw to Dahlen to stop Wolverton, Thomas scored, but Gleason's effort to reach the plate was not so successful, Dahlen making a capital throw to Warner, thus completing a double play. In the seventh inning Titus led off with a single, followed by a sharp hit by Hulswitt to right field. Browne allowed the ball to get away from him, which scored Titus, and Hulswitt landed on third. Sutthoff hit to McGann, who hesitated what to do with the ball, and the result was Hulswitt scored and Sutthoff landed on first after colliding with McGann. McGee hit for three bases in the eighth inning, but poor batting followed.

Hulswitt made a pretty catch far into left field of Bresnahan's hit, but he fumbled Browne's hit, who scored on McGann's three-bagger to left field. Donlin struck out, but Dahlen's hit was juggled by Wolverton, which enabled McGann to score. Warner started the seventh inning with a safe hit to second base. Wiltse got his base on balls, and Bresnahan bunted toward the third base foul line. Sutthoff fielded the ball and made a horrible throw to first, and to catch Bresnahan at third Dunn sent the ball to Wolverton, who failed to stop it. These mistakes allowed three men to score. Browne followed with a three-base hit to right field, and he reached the plate on McGann's long fly to centre field. The score:

EGAN WINS GOLF MEDAL FOR THE LOWEST SCORE

MATCH PLAY BEGINS TO-DAY

With H. Chandler Egan, the young Western golf champion, still heading the list of championship golf contestants in the National tournament at the Baltusrol Golf Club, near Short Hills, N. J., the number of eligible competitors was reduced yesterday from 64 to 32. These survivors will meet this morning on the links in the first of the match play rounds, two rounds being finished each day until the final on Saturday.

Chandler Egan's supreme steadiness occasioned favorable comment from the enthusiastic golfers who followed the Harvard student on his double round, for the play yesterday was 36 holes, medal play. The sixty-four survivors of the previous day met in another medal play match, and the leading thirty-two were picked to continue the contest.

Egan demonstrated clearly that the course can be played in tolerably low figures, provided one keeps his distance straight and plays reliable golf. The punishment is severe for those who do not keep well within bounds, and the general high scoring is due to this fact. Egan's total score for the two days' play, 54 holes in all, was 242 strokes. He did 80 and 82 yesterday, while the champion, Travis, who was formerly in a triple tie for second place, advanced unchallenged to that rank with a total of 246 strokes, his rounds being 83 and 82.

The Executive Committee of the United States Golf Association announced that the customary gold medal would be given for the low score, so Egan is the prize winner in the medal score play.

The greatest surprise of the day came when Findlay Douglas, an ex-National champion, and who was one of eight tied for the last two places in the first day's round, failed in the play-off to get in the eligible list.

The young element continued to show fine golf, and the college men are well represented among the survivors. Frederick Herreshoff, nephew of the yacht designer and a school lad, is well up among the leaders, and J. D. Travers, another school lad, stands third in the medal play total, only 3 strokes behind Travis. Archie Reid, Malcolm McBurney, Max Behr, who made the best 18-hole score of the tournament, 78 strokes; Enos Wilder, P. H. B. Frelinghuysen, G. A. Brokaw, Arthur Havemeyer, and H. W. Perrin are among the young set, all of whom are likely to prove dangerous competitors in the succeeding match play rounds. The Texan golfer, R. H. Connelly, and the Pacific Coast player, F. C. Newton, from Seattle, still have another chance to reach the championship heights. The thirty-two eligibles are:

Lieber & Co. Claim Free Entrance for Article as a Crude Mineral—$40,000 Worth Imported.

A protest was filed with the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday by H. Lieber & Co. of 25 West Broadway, against the assessment of 25 per cent. duty on what is described as a "small package" of radium. Since the importation of radium in commercial quantities began, about a year ago, it has been classified for customs purposes as a chemical compound at 25 per cent. The importers now assert that it is free of duty as a crude mineral substance. The board has set a hearing for Sept. 13, when the case for the importers will be argued by Col. J. B. Wilkinson, Jr.

The particular importation which is the subject of the protest contains 50 milligrammes and is worth about $1,000. So far, the commercial importations of radium have amounted to about $40,000, and have practically all been handled by Lieber & Co.

HOSIERY YARN CONFERENCE.

Southern Manufacturers Hold a Secret Meeting at Charlotte.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 7.—Hosiery yarn manufacturers representing 285,000 of the 400,000 spindles engaged on that line of goods in the South held what was said to be an important secret conference here to-day.

An Alabama manufacturer when asked what was done replied that the conference had done absolutely nothing. J. F. Taylor of Kenston, the Secretary, said the meeting was entirely formal and had no connection whatever with any organization. It was called, he said, by six or eight prominent spinners, for the purpose of discussing the situation and getting on a better working basis. The outlook, he said, was more favorable provided the present cotton crop could be kept out of the hands of the speculators. If the crop should prove to be more than 11,000,000 bales, the spinners believed the speculators hardly would be able to manipulate it.

One of the most prominent men attending the meeting is R. S. Reinhardt of Lincolnton, President of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Reinhardt doesn't see anything particularly encouraging in the outlook. "Yarns continue to sell at low prices," he said, "and cotton fails to decline, despite the fact that the season for lower prices has arrived."

COTTON GOODS COMBINATION.

Southern Manufacturers of Colored Material Organize at Atlanta.

ATLANTA, Sept. 7.—About forty of the prominent colored cotton goods manufacturers of the South met here to-day and organized under the name of the Southern Colored Cotton Goods Weavers' Association. F. O. Moring of Raleigh, N. C., was elected President, and a committee was selected further to perfect the organization and to notify all manufacturers of this line of goods of the action of the meeting.

The discussion at the meeting is summed up practically in the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That this meeting recommend to the members of this association that final action be taken at an adjourned meeting, to be held at Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 5, binding its members not to place goods on memorandum or to guarantee prices to customers, furthermore, not to allow cancellations of contract by customers, and that fulfillment of all contracts be rigidly enforced. We also recommend that action be taken on freight allowances, which have grown to be excessive.

FORE RIVER CO. REORGANIZED.

Shipbuilding Concern Bought In Under Foreclosure and Incorporated.

BOSTON, Sept. 7.—The Fore River Shipbuilding Company of Quincy has been incorporated under Massachusetts laws for the purpose of taking over the property and business of the Fore River Ship and Engine Company, whose property was foreclosed at Quincy to-day. The capital stock of the concern is to be $4,800,000, to be divided into 24,000 shares each of common and 6 per cent. non-cumulative preferred stock.

At the foreclosure sale the property was bid in by Henry Endicott, jr., of Boston, representing the Reorganization Committee, for $1,000,000. It was announced that the outstanding indebtedness of the company was $1,600,000. The sale included all property of the company and contracts already made with the Government and others.

Three battleships are now under construction at the yards for the United States Government.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

WILSON W. HOOVER.—Judge McCarthy of the City Court has appointed John G. Singer referee in supplementary proceedings for Wilson W. Hoover of 202 West Fourteenth Street, on two judgments, which were obtained against him by George M. Brooks for $1,838 on Aug. 30 last, and by Joseph H. Claffy for $1,297 on June 18, 1898, the latter judgment having been assigned to the National Elevator and Machine Company. Mr. Hoover has been a mining promoter for several years past, was President of a gold mining company with an office at 25 Broad Street, and owns 10,000 shares of stock of the Angel Consolidated Mining Company. It is said that he was formerly a Justice of the Supreme Court of Arizona.

WILLIAM JACOBUS.—Deputy Sheriff Porges has received another attachment against William Jacobus, wholesale dealer in old metals at 253 Water Street, for $4,612, in favor of Harper & Brothers, for old metals sold to him between Aug. 2 and 6. The attachment was obtained on the ground that he had disposed of his property and left the State. An affidavit made by E. W. Blatchely and others who made inquiries about Mr. Jacobus were submitted to the court, in which it was stated that they were informed that the metal bought by Mr. Jacobus from Harper & Brothers was immediately sold by him for less than cost; that he had purchased $15,000 worth of jewelry from a Maiden Lane dealer, which he had disposed of to a jeweler on the Bowery near Canal Street, and that he had closed up his place of business and his house about Aug. 31, and had left for parts unknown. His liabilities were reported to be $60,000, and it was intimated that he might go to South America. A petition in bankruptcy was filed against him on Saturday.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

BERNARD S. HATTON.—Bernard S. Hatton, dealer in men's furnishing goods at 2,149 Broadway, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $5,377 and nominal assets of $4,350, consisting of stock, $4,000; fixtures, $250, and accounts, $700. The largest creditor is Anna L. Healy of Far Rockaway, $4,000. The business was started in November, 1900, by Hatton & Healy. Mr. Healy died on April 17, 1903, and Mr. Hatton succeeded to the business in January, 1904.

NEW YORK AND LIMA OIL COMPANY.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the New York and Lima Oil Company of this city by the following creditors: Charles Shongood, $347; Benzien Kupferberg, $200, and Josef Frankel, $200, all for money loaned. It was alleged that it is insolvent, and has paid some creditors to prefer them. The company is a New Jersey corporation, incorporated in February, 1902, with a capitali stock of $1,000,000, and operated a number of oil wells in Allen County, Ohio.

HERMAN MAYER & Co.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Herman and Jack Mayer, who composed the firm of herman Mayer & Co., cloak manufacturers, at 35 and 37 East Twentieth Street, by the following creditors: Aaron Harris, $5,182, for money loaned; Michel & Krieger, $348, for merchandise, and Emily B. Hopkins, $400, for rent. It was alleged that they are insolvent; that Jack Mayer has concealed and removed stock and fixtures, also $5,000 money in bank, and that Herman Mayer has also concealed and removed money; that their place of business is closed, all goods have been removed, and some property is believed to be in a storage warehouse. The Sheriff received an execution against the firm on Aug. 11.

Filipinos in Jersey Normal School.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 7.—Six Filipino boys, New Jersey's share in the allotment of students, have come to this city to attend the State Normal School. They will remain at the school for three years, and then take positions as teachers or under the civil service in the islands. The names of these protégés of Uncle Sam are Digno Alba, Eustalio Illustrae, Pelagio Ruis, Josè Espirita, Pedrio Sarrano, and Benito N. Suga. All speak English fairly well.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS.

Department of Finance, Bureau for the Collection of Taxes, New York, September 1, 1904.
TAXPAYERS WHO DESIRE TO OBTAIN their bills promptly should make immediate written requisition, (blanks may be procured in the borough offices) stating the property by Section or Ward, Block and Lot or Map number, making copy of same from their bills of last year.
If a taxpayer is assessed for personal tax, the requisition should also request bill for such tax.
In case of any doubt in regard to Ward, Section, Block or Lot number, taxpayers should take their deeds to the Department of Taxes and Assessments and have their property located on the maps of that Department and forward to the Deputy Receiver of Taxes with the requisition a certified memorandum of their property, which will be furnished by the Department of Taxes and Assessments.
Taxpayers in this manner will receive their bills returned by mail at the earliest possible moment and avoid any delay caused by waiting on lines, as required in case of personal application.
JOHN J. McDONOUGH, No. 57 Chambers Street, Borough of Manhattan, New York.
JOHN B. UNDERHILL, corner Third and Tremont Avenues, Borough of The Bronx, New York.
JAMES B. VAN WYCK, Municipal Building, Borough of Brooklyn, New York.
FREDERICK W. BLECKWENN, corner Jackson Avenue and Fifth Street, Long Island City, Borough of Queens, New York.
After receiving the bills, the taxpayer will see that they are properly rebated, then draw check for the net amount due to the order of the Receiver of Taxes and mail bill and check, with an addressed envelope, with the return postage prepaid, to the Deputy Receiver in whichever borough the property is located.
Checks should be mailed as soon as possible after the bills have been received by the taxpayer.
All bills paid during October must be rebated before payment.
DAVID E. AUSTEN, Receiver of Taxes.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—New York exchange was 45 cents discount. Time and call loans 5@5½ per cent. In Boxboard preferred efforts were made by floor traders to push prices higher, and the stock sold at 12, but gradually receded from that position. Trading in Swifts stock amounted to over 400 shares during the morning, all going at 102. Metropolitan Elevated preferred sold again at 20, but eased off fractionally. Biscuit issues were steady. Title and Trust sold for a time above par and Can preferred went in fair amount at steady figures. The feature of the bond market was an early sale of $20,000 West Chicago first mortgage 5 per cents at 96½. Transactions:

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Irregularity developed in the trading in outside securities, but the bulk of this weakness was confined to the low-priced issues, while the more important securities like Northern Securities, Standard Oil, Interborough, and Greene Consolidated all showed net advances. Fewer issues were traded in, and with the exception of one or two stocks smaller totals were shown. The bond market was even less active, and few bonds were traded in. American Can preferred opened strong along with the rest of the market, but eased off and closed at the lowest. British Columbia Copper displayed more activity than in many weeks and reached 3⅝ on the absorption of 3,000 shares.

MANHATTAN TRANSIT was the feature of the trading yesterday and displayed the greatest activity. More than 12,000 shares sold on the break of 1¼ points from the previous day's high. The idea prevailed that insiders were selling and had disposed of thousands of shares on the drop.

INTERBOROUGH RAPID TRANSIT, which declined sharply on Tuesday to 141, opened at an advance of 1¼ points at 147¼, and on good buying rose 1⅝ more to 148⅝. The amicable settlement of the differences between the management and employes of the company had resulted in a good demand for the stock with the accompanying advance.

SEABOARD AIR LINE preferred was the weakest issue traded in, and on few sales broke 2 points to 29½. The selling was said to be for profit taking, and when this was removed a rally of a point set in, with the final transaction made at a net loss of ⅞. Little attention was given to the common, and less than 1,000 shares were sold.

ST. LOUIS TRANSIT.—The enormous increase in the earnings of this company, owing to the World's Fair, caused a jump of a point in the common and 1½ points in the preferred. The gross earnings for the month of August reached the total of $1,074,776, an increase of 54 per cent. over those of the same month in the past year.

The principal transactions, in 100-share lots, reported in the outside market yesterday, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

Yesterday's market showed irregularity upon a volume of business a trifle larger than that upon which recent advances have been made. It savors of exaggeration to apply the adjective reactionary to a market still so responsive to its makers' moods, and so irresponsive to ordinary factors of value. Indeed, when they are so contradictory it is difficult to deduce any general argument based upon them. Yesterday, for instance, Great Northern made a poor report for August and New York Central a very good report. The specific application is not obscure, but the bearing upon general values is less obvious. And the remark applies to even so plain a matter as the marking down of prices in the steel trade, billets being cheapened yesterday $4 a ton. The trust can hardly lose less than a million dollars a week on the cuts recently made, and there is no certainty that it can make up in volume of business what it loses in per cent. of profit. The weekly résumé of the trade by its leading organ does indeed report increased production and decreased stocks. It is a straw, but it is only one, and it takes many to build up such a haystack as is necessary to indicate larger profits on the reduced prices. Other items of intelligence bearing upon the day's market were a change in the commodity markets, both grains and cotton showing a stronger tone; a change in London's attitude toward this market, turning buyer upon balance and sending over fractionally better prices, and a somewhat skeptical position toward a continued rise by many who see profits upon purchases which they risk by overstaying their market.

It is a tribute to the market's stability that under such mixed conditions prices showed no weakness worth the name. Reading and the Pacifics sold off a little, but their loss is so incosiderable in comparison with their advances that it is likelier to encourage fresh purchases than to stimulate selling. Almost the contrary remark might be made about the day's advances. Brooklyn's price is worthy of being bracketed with Reading's as something like top for non-dividend payers. Even actual dividends instead of hopes of dividends can hardly warrant pressing advances so long and large. The advances in the subsidiary iron stocks—for examples, Tennessee, Republic, and Colorado—indicate no fear of results to them by the trust's punishment of price cutters. Railway supply concerns also improved upon fresh talk of reviving railway business when crops get to moving freely. This epitomizes substantially all the movements among the active or significant stocks. Otherwise the list altered only fractionally and irregularly, there being no presumption in favor of declines. The bond market continues full in volume and strong in tone, but with the familiar predominance in speculative issues. The only response to last week's loss of banks' surplus reserve is an attempt by lenders to mark up rates. Naturally the result was not an increased demand. Supplies must decrease largely before that comes around.

Torpedo Boat Co. Increases Capital.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 7.—The Sub-Surface Torpedo Boat Company, registered office at 152 Market Street, Paterson, filed a certificate of amendment of charter here to-day, increasing its capital stock to $1,250,000. C. R. Agnew is the Vice President of the company, and E. H. Blanc is Secretary.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Big Profit-Taking Tests the Market's Strength—Corn Crop Scares About Due—Big Men Still Bullish.

The market results of E. H. Harriman's bullish interview which was published yesterday morning must have been pleasing to that eminent financier. Everybody that read it seemed quite suddenly seized with a desire to sell, no matter whether they had stocks or not, and this desire did not fail to affect quotations. Union and Southern Pacific shares, over the destinies of which Mr. Harriman presides, suffered the most, and showed net declines of a point and more, and traders seemed to take a special delight in this depression. There never yet was a bullish interview handed out to the Street which was not seized upon as a signal to sell, the theory being that if the big fellows want to sell they would be running contrary to human ways if they did not praise up their wares. Those who took profits on the long side yesterday may have been wise, but those who sold short are taking chances of getting left, like the foolish virgins who had provided no oil for their lamps.

Watching the Crop Experts.

That the market may and will show reactions is not unlikely. It is practically certain that within the next few days, weather permitting, those eminent crop experts who killed the wheat crop will make an attempt to dispose of the corn crop in the same old way. Signs are propitious for such an undertaking at this time. We are liable to get first frosts within the next two weeks, and if the thermometer gets anywhere near a point which would warrant damage reports it is an odds-on bet that the reports will be sent out in double quick time. The preparations have all been made. The crop experts are already on the spot, having selected reasonably comfortable hotels where to await the signal, and those Wall Street houses that can be relied upon to do their share of the work were getting dispatches from the front yesterday to look sharp, for something would be doing soon. The shares that will be attacked on a corn crop scare are Atchison, Missouri Pacific, and the Southwestern shares generally. It is expected that the scare will have more effect on the market than the wheat crop damage reports, as it will be argued that the failure of one crop assured, the failure of the other would be a severe setback.

Much Long Stock Sold.

The strength of the market was severely tested yesterday by a heavy profit-taking movement. The big commission houses sold lines of long stock, and Charles G. Gates & Co. were said to have been selling all around the room. Charles G. Gates was in Chicago, and from that city were wired reports that he was talking bullish. As Chicago is proverbially a windy city, anything that comes from there is not surprising to observers of the weather or the market.

Big Men Still Bullish.

Those men whose opinions Wall Street seldom feels inclined to copper are still bullish, and for a long pull. James Speyer told his friends that he agreed with, Mr. Harriman's views, and that with a Republican victory assured he expected a long, steady movement upward. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. are openly bullish. Gould interests, it was rumored, had been selling, but from what can be learned about the Gould attitude they are believers in better conditions. The attitude of the City Bank crowd is less certain, and the return of Mr. Stillman is therefore awaited with interest.

Call Money Slightly Higher.

The call money market attracted some attention yesterday, as for the first time in months call money showed a tendency to harden a little. The highest was 1½ per cent., but very little was done at that price, and it was even reported that at the time when loans at that rate were being made there were offers at 1¼. Foreign exchange declined on further liberal offerings of cotton bills.

NORFOLK & WESTERN ACCOUNT

The annual report of the Norfolk and Western was made public yesterday. The income account shows:

EARNINGS.

From freight	18,894,941.10	17,676,348.57

Total earnings	$22,800,991.07	$21,160,675.26

EXPENSES.

Maintenance of way and structures	$2,860,055.00	$2,754,199.70
Maintenance of equipment	3,532,058.18	3,041,414.42
Conducting transportation	6,853,962.92	6,014,468.10
General expenses, including taxes	967,653.01	887,347.93
Operating expenses	$14,213,729.71	$12,697,430.15
Net earnings from operations	$8,587,261.36	$8,463,245.11
To which add interest and dividends	65,218.11	148,258.76
Total income	$8,652,479.47	$8,611,503.87
From which deduct:
Interest on funded debt	2,603,510.28	2,435,690.00
Interest on equipment trust obligations	156,888.89	135,625.00
Interest, discount, and exchange	72,777.78
	$2,833,176.95	$2,571,315.00
Net income	$5,819,302.52	$6,040,188.57

The increase in operating expenses was due mainly to increased wages and increased expenditures for betterments. The statement shows a decrease of $5,000,000 in the amount charged to the betterment fund. If the same amount had been charged off as was charged off the year before the road would show a deficit of $343,615, instead of a surplus of $156,385.

New Move in Asphalt Litigation.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 7.—Judge Lanning, in the United States Circuit Court, made an order to-day to show cause why the petition of Henry C. Bullitt of Philadelphia to contest the decrees by which Receiver Henry Tatnall and the stockholders of the Asphalt Company of America and the National Asphalt Company were relieved of future liability, should not be heard. The order is returnable on Sept. 16.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—Money was plentiful in the market to-day, the borrowings from the Bank of England having been liquidated.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were firm and a moderate amount of business was transacted. There was a continued demand for high class securities for investment purposes.

Consols opened with a better tone, reacted on realizations, and closed steady.

Americans were strong, following New York, especially Coalers, and were fairly active. They eased later and closed regular.

Foreigners were quiet. Japanese drooped on the supposed incompleteness of the Japanese success at Liao-Yang. Imperial Japanese Government Sixes of 1904 were quoted at 90½.

Consols, for money, 88⅝; Consols, for account, 88⅝; Anaconda, 4; Atchison, 84⅞; Atchison preferred, 101¼; Baltimore and Ohio, 90⅞; Canadian Pacific, 129⅜; Chesapeake and Ohio, 41¾; Chicago Great Western, 16; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 161½; De Beers, 18⅜; Denver and Rio Grande, 26¾; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 80¼; Erie, 31⅛; Erie, first preferred, 68⅜; Erie, second preferred, 44½; Illinois Central, 143; Louisville and Nashville, 126½; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 23⅜; New York Central, 127¼; Norfolk and Western, 70⅝; Norfolk and Western preferred, 92; Ontario and Western, 33½; Pennsylvania, 65; Rand Mines, 10⅛; Reading, 34¼; Reading, first preferred, 43¾; Reading, second preferred, 38¾; Southern Railway, 30⅝; Southern Railway preferred, 97½; Southern Pacific, 59⅞; Union Pacific, 103¾; Union Pacific preferred 96; United States Steel, 13⅜; United States Steel preferred, 63⅞; Wabash, 21¼; Wabash preferred, 42; Spanish Fours, 87¼.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £53,000.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were irregular. Internationals were heavy. Russian imperial 4s were quoted at 93.20 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 507.

The private rate of discount was 1¾ per cent.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f 60c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 24c for checks.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Prices on the Boerse to-day had a tendency to be firmer.

Discount rates: Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 2⅝ per cent.

ONTARIO & WESTERN REPORT.

President Commends Voting Trust Abolition—Financing Plan.

The annual report of the New York, Ontario and Western, which was published yesterday, made a favorable impression in Wall Street. In the report President Fowler discusses at length the recent movement for the abolition of the voting trust and defends the attitude of the Directors in the matter. He says:

"Acting upon the recommendation of the Special Committee, the Board of Directors has determined to cease using surplus earnings for the second track work, and is now considering a financial plan for creating new resources in order to provide for the present and future requirements of the company. The plan will be submitted to the stockholders at a special meeting to be called as soon after the annual meeting as practicable.

"As shown by the present report, there stood to the credit of profit and loss account June 30, 1904, the sum of $6,099,387.

"Should the shareholders, at the special meeting, approve the plan, the company will be enabled to provide means for completing the work now under way and making improvements in the future, and to reimburse the net revenue account to such an extent as will warrant the payment of a dividend upon the common stock, so terminating the right of the preferred stock to elect eight of the thirteen Directors. The question of the division of future surplus earnings will then be left free for disposition by those to whom the owners of the property may intrust its management."

The statement of earnings shows:

The report also contains a comparative statement of operations for every year since 1890, which shows an improvement in the condition of the road, financial and physical, brought about by the present management.

The total output of anthracite coal, according to the report, was 59,362,831 tons, an increase of 28,161,941 tons.

GENERAL BUSINESS ITEMS.

The Chicago Telephone Company reports an increase of 1,018 in the number of new telephones installed during August, making the total now in service 112,648 instruments.

Joplin (Mo.) dispatches state that the top price for zinc ore is unchanged at $40 a ton, but that lead ore has advanced $3.50 a ton, following a similar advance in pig lead.

Dispatches from Calumet, Mich., report an improved outlook throughout the copper producers, and indicate a record production for September.

The train records show that there were received and forwarded at Indianapolis in the week ended Sept. 3 a total of 28,912 cars, and of that number 22,612 were loaded cars, against 22,118 in the corresponding week of 1903, and against 20,964 in 1902.

The Fore River Shipbuilding Company of Quincy, Mass., with a capital stock of $4,800,000, has been incorporated under Massachusetts laws.

NO OPEN BILLET MARKET.

Lackawanna Company Will Co-operate at New $19 Level.

It was officially announced yesterday that the price of steel billets had been reduced from $23 to $19 a ton. The reduction had been generally expected, and it caused no surprise in Wall Street. Of more importance was the announcement that the Lackawanna Steel Company had agreed to co-operate with the other manufacturers of steel in maintaining prices at the new level. This means that there will be no open market, but that all of the companies will make their contracts on the basis of the reduced schedules.

The Iron Age, speaking of the situation, will say to-day:

Our monthly blast furnace statistics make a very encouraging showing. The productive capacity increased during the month of August from 246,000 tons on the 1st of that month to 292,000 tons on the 1st of September. By far the greater part of this increase is due to the resumption, notably in the Central West, of work on the part of the steel companies, which is a clear indication that the demand for steel itself has largely increased. This movement is still under way, a large number of furnaces controlled by the United States Steel Corporation having blown in since the opening of the month.

The August production of the merchant furnaces was 421,800 tons, as compared with 411,400 tons in July. Simultaneously the stocks held by merchant furnaces have declined from 760,000 tons to 610,000 tons, which is an eloquent proof of the fact that at last the consumption has overtaken production. The output of the steel companies increased from 695,000 tons in July to 747,500 tons in August, thus showing that the resumption which started in the month did not obtain full away during August.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 7.—Money is distinctly firmer, but rates have hardly changed. Call loans, 2½@3½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 4@5 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 4@5 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds, 20c discount; clearings, $22,854,754; balances, $1,643,618; Sub-Treasury debit, $84,134. The foreign exchange market is easier. Rates on cables and demand have been reduced one-quarter cent. Actual rates follow:

	Sight.	60 Days.
Sterling	4.87¼	4.85
Commercial		4.84
Francs	5.15⅝	5.18¾
Reichsmarks	95⅝	95⅞
Guilders	40⅛	40⅜

The stock market was irregular to-day, with considerable selling counteracted by good buying. The tone regarding the coppers is bullish and to-day Calumet, Osceola, and Mohawk were the features. The Fitchburg Railroad has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred stock, payable Oct. 1 to stockholders of record Sept. 1. The Concord and Montreal Railroad Company has declared the regular quarterly dividends of 1¾ per cent. on classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the stock, payable Oct. 1 to stockholders of record Sept. 1. The Directors of the Daly-West Mining Company have declared the regular monthly dividend of 40 cents a share, payable on Sept. 15 to stockholders of record Sept. 10. Transfer books do not close. Centennial and Bingham also went higher. Utah was firm and Copper Range held up. United States Mining continued rather soft. Dominion Coal was decidedly weak. Steel preferred was active. Telephone grew strong in the afternoon. The other specialities were dull. Complete transactions were as follows:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Builders Take Large Plots in the Northerly Part of Harlem—Sale of West End Avenue Corner—Dealings by Brokers and in the Auction Room.

L. J. Phillips & Co. have sold for Lowenfeld & Prager to Isaac and Henry Mayer, builders, the plot, 225 by 99.11, on the north side of One Hundred and Fifty-third Street, 100 feet east of Eighth Avenue.

Walter J. Cohn has sold the block front on the west side of Lenox Avenue, between One Hundred and Forty-third and One Hundred and Forty-fourth Streets, 200 by 125. The buyers, Arnstein Brothers, will build six-story flats on the property.

Panama Republic Lends $600,000.

One of the largest mortgage investments made by the Republic of Panama in this city was revealed by yesterday's filings at the Register's Office. The amount of the loan is $600,000. The property involved is the new Butterick Building at Spring, Macdougal, and Vandam Streets. The mortgage has five years to run and will bear 4½ per cent. interest.

Quick Resale on West End Avenue.

Albert Zimmermann has bought for a client the five-story double flat at the southeast corner of West End Avenue and Ninety-sixth Street, 26.4 by 96.9, and has resold the property, through Arnold & Byrne, to the Palisade Realty Company.

Albert Zimmermann has sold for a client, through Bert G. Faulhaber & Co., the five-story apartment house at the northeast corner of Morningside Avenue East and One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, on lot 25 by 100. The buyer, a Mr. Adair, gives in part payment a tract of thirty-five acres in Sullivan County, with dwelling and outbuildings.

West Side Dwelling Changes Hands.

The four-story brownstone-front dwelling 234 West Fifty-sixth Street, 25 by 100, has been sold. The owners of record of the property are John J. Clancy and William A. Ewing.

Buyer for East 74th Street House.

J. B. Layng, Jr., has sold the five-story American basement dwelling 57 East Seventy-fourth Street, 18 by 102.2.

Operators Buy on East 112th Street.

Nevins & Perelman have bought 111 and 113 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street, old buildings, on plot 39 by 100.71.

L. Wolf has sold for Eliza C. Klein and Georg. Helferich 245 and 247 East One Hundred and Fifth Street, two four-story flats on plot 33.6 by 100.11.

West 18th Street Dwelling Sold.

Charles E. Duross has sold, in conjunction with George W. Mercer & Son, the three-story dwelling 323 West Eighteenth Street, to Stephen J. Collins.

Deal for East 134th Street Flats.

Haber, Dworkowitz & Haber have bought, through Cohen, Kaplan & Co., from Kronovet, Stoloff & Levine, the two five-story double flats 807 and 809 East One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street, each 28.4 by 100.

Albert Zimmermann has bought for a client, through Bert G. Faulhaber & Co., the two five-story double flats 754 and 756 East One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, each 25 by 85.

Many Plots Sold in the Bronx.

Jacob Leitner has sold for a Mr. Newenhouse a plot, 110 by 140, on the north side of Wendover Avenue, 100 feet east of Third Avenue; also, for Emil S. Levi, the plot, 95 by 40, on the west side of Brook Avenue, 100 feet south of Wendover Avenue; also, for a Mr. Bamman, the southwest corner of Bathgate Avenue and One Hundred and Seventy-second Street, 44 by 100; also, for Brenner & Bauer, the plot, 50 by 125, on the southeast side of Prospect Avenue, 100 feet south of One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street; also, for Frederick McCarthy, a one-family house on Dawson Street, near Prospect Avenue, and for Albert Schwartzler, two five-story apartment houses in course of construction on the east side of Prospect Avenue, 218 feet north of Home Street.

Charles F. Townsend has sold to Alfred G. Bixby for $3,250, a plot, 75 by 100, on Linnear Place, near Washington Avenue, for immediate improvement.

The Fremont Realty Company of 52 Broadway has just built a row of eight houses on the northwest corner of One Hundred and Eighty-sixth Street and Cambreling Avenue, and has sold the corner, a two-family house, to Lerman Brothers.

S. Cowen has sold 685 Cauldwell Avenue, a three-family brick flat, for Charles H. Edgar, to a Mr. Lowry; also the northwest corner of Prospect Avenue and Dawson Street, a four-story double flat, with stores, for Mr. T. Farrell to an investor.

JUSTICE GAYNOR NOW AFTER SCHMITTBERGER

Recalls Lexow Days in Decision for Bowery Hotel.

ENJOINS CAPT. McDERMOTT

Inspector and Captain Both Took Graft Prior to 1894, Court Says, in Explanation.

Justice Gaynor of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, again scores the police in a decision which he has handed down making permanent a temporary injunction obtained by Samuel Hertz, who keeps the Dry Dock Hotel, at Bowery and Third Street, restraining Capt. Stephen McDermott of the Fifth Street Station from interfering with his business. Hertz complained that Capt. McDermott had kept policemen stationed in and about his hotel to warn prospective guests and customers that the place was a disorderly house and likely to be raided.

As in decisions in similar cases which have been before him, Justice Gaynor severely rebukes the police for what he declares to be their "lawless methods" in dealing with such matters. Such methods, he asserts, breed extortion, and he refers to the Lexow investigation as proving this. The police, he says, are not above the law, and officials who override the law are guilty of a vice more dangerous to society than all the other vices and crimes combined. Government is thus perverted into one of men, and not of laws. If one of the large hotels of the city were to be treated in the same high-handed manner by a Police Captain without judicial hearing, the Justice declares, the community would at once see the enormity of the act and the danger of such ignorant or criminal pretensions.

Continuing, Justice Gaynor says:

"Lawless acts like those disclosed in this case of police officials in the City of New York have been used for years to extort millions of money and enable such officials to retire, one after another, with great wealth. One of the affidavits before me discloses that Police Captain Schmittberger made a full disclosure, on oath, before a legislative investigating committee in 1894, of how he had extorted money right and left for years from the proprietors of places and divided it with his superior officers, and that such conduct was general among police officials. Notwithstanding this revelation he is not only still on the police force, but has been promoted to be an Inspector of Police. This affidavit purports to identify the defendant as the same Officer McDermott who, according to Schmittberger's testimony, did the actual collecting for him, but I doubt its accuracy in that particular.

"The learned Assistant Corporation Counsel assured the court that the defendant was a good man and could be trusted not to use his lawless methods to extort money. If that were so, he would still be setting a bad example for police officials who are not so good as he is. But the only answer needed is that there is no official in this country, however high or good, who can be suffered to destroy our system of government. When or where was free government ever overturown by unlawful official violence, gradually or all at once, except under a pretense of the public good?"

100,000 PART-TIME PUPILS.

Plans Considered to Reduce Congestion in Public Schools.

The Board of Superintendents of the Department of Education is considering plans for reducing the number of children on part time. The Superintendents admit that there will probably be more than 100,000 part-time pupils this Fall, and say that the graduating of 15,000 children last July will not reduce the number.

Besides the old plan of consolidating classes and hiring vacant rooms for classes, the Superintendents are anxious to adopt a system of transporting pupils from congested to uncrowded districts on street cars. This plan has been tried in upper Manhattan where the city has for some time chartered a car to carry a load of children from Two Hundred and Eighth Street along Amsterdam Avenue to One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street in the morning and back at night. The cost is $5 a day, or about one-half fare.

LOST $6,000, SHE SAYS.

Willing to Reward Honest Finder with $1,000—No Questions.

Miss G. St. Clair of 135 East Thirtieth Street has advertised that she will reward with $1,000 the person who found her card case containing $6,000 in bills on Monday morning. She also says she really means it.

She told a reporter yesterday that she put four one-thousand-dollar bills and four five-hundred-dollar bills in her card case on Monday morning and started to the bank. On the way she summoned a cabman, she said, and dickered unsuccessfully with him for a ride to the bank. Then she noticed that her purse was open. She closed it without examining further, she says, and discovered her loss only when she reached the bank.

Miss St. Clair says that if she gets $5,000 of the $6,000 back she will not ask any questions.

CITY THIEVES CARRY SCALES.

Use Them to Prevent Junkman from Cheating Them in Weight.

So that junkmen to whom they sold stolen brass doorknobs might not cheat them, a gang of young boys of the east side carried pocket spring scales with which to do their own weighing. Policeman Cummins of the Madison Street Station produced a pair of the scales before Justice Olmsted in the Children's Court yesterday during the trial of Adolph Bernstein, fifteen years old, of 169 Eldridge Street.

The policeman testified that he caught the boy with a pair of scales in his pocket, and also a steel cross-bar used to loosen doorknobs. Mrs. Rose Leventhal of 101 Division Street identified young Bernstein as one of three boys who, she alleged, had stolen the doorknobs from her flat. Bernstein was found guilty and remanded until Saturday for sentence.

OCTOGENARIAN A SUICIDE.

Jersey City Man, Insane from Grief, Leaped from Ferry.

William Bockhop, eighty-five years of age, who lived with his son, Henry F. Bockhop, at 345 Pavonia Avenue, Jersey City, committed suicide shortly before noon yesterday by jumping from the ferryboat Susquehanna of the Erie Railroad Company while the boat was lying in her slip at the foot of Pavonia Avenue. Bockhop boarded the boat and sat in the front cabin. Just as the boat was about to start for New York he walked out on the front deck, climbed over the rail, and plunged into the water below. Several persons saw the old man prepare to jump, but they could not reach him before he was over the rail. The cries of "Man overboard!" brought Walter Sanders, one of the deckhands on the boat, to the bow, and he plunged into the water after the old man. He dived several times, and after about twenty minutes succeeded in getting hold of the body, which had been carried around to the other side of the boat by the tide. Sanders was almost exhausted when taken on board.

Mr. Bockhop's son told the authorities that his father had been driven insane by the loss of his wife several years ago, but said that the aged man had never shown signs of suicide mania.

LADDER BREAKS WITH FIREMEN

All Managed to Escape but One, Who Fell from Second Floor.

During a fire at 351 West Fifty-seventh Street, last evening, a seventy-foot extension ladder with four firemen clinging to it, broke. Fortunately only one man was badly hurt. He was taken to Roosevelt Hospital unconscious.

The fire started on the parlor floor of the five-story brownstone house occupied by J. J. Meyers. When the firemen arrived the flames were pouring out of the top windows and the skylight.

The extension ladder was run up the front of the house, and Assistant Foreman Michael McGann of Engine Co. No. 23, Firemen John Hancke, John Monahan, and Thomas Brady were ordered to ascend. Hancke was the first to start. He was near the top when the ladder started to swing and there was a noise like the splitting of timbers. Firemen in the street shouted to Hancke, but he did not hear them. Then the collapse came. Hancke jumped to the fourth-story window. A piece of the broken ladder struck him, knocking him from this point, but he managed to catch a piece of the rope on the ladder and slide down to the ground.

McGann, Monahan, and Brady, who were about ten feet below Hancke, started to slide down. McGann lost his hold at the second floor and fell. He was picked up unconscious. An ambulance was summoned from Roosevelt Hospital, but did not arrive quickly enough, and Chief Devanny ordered McGann removed to the institution in his wagon. The other men, suffering from bruises and slight cuts, were treated on the ground.

The clerks of the Hotel Kenmore, adjoining the Meyers house, had a hard time quieting the guests. The fire was extinguished after a loss of $500.

RESTRICTS SALE OF ACID.

Board of Health Also Creates New Office in the Bronx.

At the conclusion of the regular meeting of the Board of Health yesterday afternoon Commissioner Darlington announced that the following amendment had been made to the Sanitary Code:

No phenol, commonly known as carbolic acid, shall be sold at retail by any person in the City of New York, except on a prescription of a physician, when in a stronger solution than 5 per cent.

Commissioner Darlington also announced the creation of the office of Chief Inspector of Contagious Diseases in the Bronx, which will be filled by Dr. Charles F. Spencer of 1,124 Tinton Avenue. The Commissioner said that on account of the rapid increase of population above the Harlem the work had increased so that the present Sanitary Inspector was unable to keep up with it. The new office will be at the headquarters of the Health Department, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Street and Franklin Avenue.

CAR SMASHES A HEARSE.

Driver and Motorman Differ as to Where the Blame Lies.

An Eighty-sixth cross-town car collided with a hearse at Ninety-second Street and Avenue A shortly after 7 o'clock last night, throwing two men into the street and smashing the hearse to splinters. The hearse had just left the ferry after a funeral in a Long Island cemetery. Henry Kraumbeck of 147 West One Hundred and Eighth Street, the driver, and George F. Bender of 873 Columbus Avehue, an undertaker, were on the seat. Both were badly bruised.

Cornelius Crowe of 66 East One Hundred and Ninth Street, the motorman, who was arrested, said that the driver of the hearse signaled him to go ahead. Kraumbeck asserted that the motorman signaled to him to pass on. After the collision the horses of the hearse started to run, but were stopped about fifty feet from the scene of the accident by Policeman Schellenberger of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station.

Dispute Over Young Woman's Body.

The body of a young woman was found in the Sound, off Hart's Island, yesterday. Albert See identified it as that of Jeanette Meehan of 427 East Seventeenth Street, one of the two young women who were drowned last Sunday afternoon by falling from a boat. A sister of the Meehan girl denied that the body was that of her sister.

Man Discharged in Murder Case.

Dominick Vigorito, a saloon keeper, of 375 Baxter Street, who was arrested on Sunday night in connection with the death of G. Cummio, found in an unconscious condition at Bayard and Baxter Streets, was discharged from custody yesterday by Magistrate Pool, in the Tombs Court. The District Attorney's office did not have sufficient evidence to hold him.

BUILDING TRADES CHIEF NOW SUING FOR PEACE

President Nason Seeks Agreements with Individual Associations.

EMPLOYERS WANT SURRENDER

Deny Knowledge of Negotiations, but Conferences Go on Just the Same.

The plan of William K. Nason, the new President of the Building Trades Alliance, to settle the building trades trouble is already under way. Mr. Nason expects that before a week some of the locked-out unions will have made agreements with the individual associations of employers by which they can return to work. The Building Trades Employers' Association, on the other hand, has chosen to take the stand that the unions must show a contrite spirit before any propositions for a settlement can be considered.

President Nason made a report of the progress of his plan at a meeting of the alliance yesterday, and said after the meeting:

"All the individual associations of employers affected by the strikes and lockout have agreed to meet representatives of the individual unions except the Electrical Contractors' Association. This association, we have been at loggerheads with frequently, and we will have to fight it. Negotiations with the other unions will begin to-morrow, and we expect that in a week some of the locked-out unions will be at work. I want to see the trouble ended as soon as possible, and it will be the fault of the employers if a settlement is not reached."

Conferences have been going on for the last two or three days between the unions in the marble industry and the Marble Industry Employers' Association with a view to settling the trouble in the marble trades. A conference was held yesterday between a committee of the Journeymen Stonecutters' Union and the employing stonecutters with a view to settling the strike at the Trinity Building, which started the building trades war. The contract for the stonecutting at the Trinity Building was sublet by the George A. Fuller Company to William Bradley & Son of Brooklyn, who put non-union men to work. At yesterday's conference William Bradley & Son agreed to employ union men, but a hitch arose over a demand that the union control the machine stone work, and the meeting ended in a deadlock.

A letter was received by the General Arbitration Board of the Employers' Association from James Nolan, Secretary of the Manhattan Borough Board of the Bricklayers' Unions, asking that a meeting of the board be called to see if all the labor troubles could not be settled at once by arbitration. The letter was referred to the Joint Arbitration Board of the Bricklayers' Unions and the Mason Builders' Association.

At the Building Trades Club the members of the Employers' Association would not admit any official knowledge of any negotiations pending between the individual unions and the individual trade associations of employers.

MEAT STRIKE TO GO ON.

Men Having So Voted, Leaders Would Like to Know What to Do Next.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—Having voted to continue the stock yards struggle until better terms can be secured, the strike leaders to-night are in a quandary as to what the next move shall be. When the result of the vote of the men, defeating the proposition to return to work, was announced to-day, it was stated by the union officials that a second ballot would be ordered at once.

Shortly after the announcement was made, however, the plan was abandoned, and efforts were begun to secure another conference with the packers. In this the strikers were unsuccessful, and then a second announcement was made that the order issued last week placing all meat on the unfair list would go into effect to-night.

Following the announcement that the strikers had voted to continue the strike a meeting attended by representatives of all the packers was held at the offices of the National Packing Company. What took place at the conference is not known, but after the meeting it was stated by one of the packers that no opportunity would be given the labor leaders to present a proposition embracing arbitration, as was being planned by the strikers.

FOR BLOCKING FIRE ESCAPES.

Magistrate Issues Warrants for Violators of Tenement House Law.

Magistrate Ommen, in the Essex Market Court, at the instance of Police Inspector Schmittberger, issued yesterday twenty warrants, charging violation of the tenement house laws covering the obstruction of fire escapes.

The request for the warrants grew out of the tenement house fire in Attorney Street early Sunday morning, when fourteen persons were burned to death and many others injured.

THIEVES CLEANED OUT STORE.

Backed a Van Up and Filled It—Hit a Boy Witness.

The police yesterday made public the fact that early on Saturday morning last thieves got into the clothing and fur store of Samuel Schmal at 175 Broome Street, and swept it clean, carrying off goods valued at $7,000. Schmal carried a stock of about 900 pieces. He lived on the second floor above the store, and there was a burglar alarm attached to both front and rear doors of the store, which was one door southeast of Clinton Street.

The police learned that a covered two-horse van, used for furniture moving, and attended by four men, stood on Clinton Street near Broome Street, from 2:30 until 3 o'clock, while the thieves passed the stolen goods out of the rear door of the store, over a fence in the rear of the two-story building on the southeast corner of Broome and Clinton Streets, and thence to the van.

The police say that the thieves forced a hall door, midway on the east side of the store, and thus gained an entrance without sounding the burglar alarm. When Schmal went down stairs on Saturday morning at 7 o'clock to purchase a newspaper and drew the window shades, he was amazed to find only bare shelves and empty boxes.

Ten-year-old Joseph Adroskey, who lives on the top floor of the house at Broome and Clinton Streets, told the police that he got out of bed at 2:30 Saturday morning and saw two men on the shed in the rear of his home; that when he stayed at the window one of the men threw a piece of wood at him and struck him in the face. He got inside, but did not tell his mother or father, fearing a whipping.

No Shooting Charge Against Woman.

Mrs. Augustina Herman of 554 Mott Avenue, who was accused of having shot Roger A. Pinner in the latter's office at 122 Water Street on Aug. 27, was discharged from custody by Magistrate Pool in the Tombs Court yesterday. Pinner failed to appear against her. He had said he would do so, but his family urged him not to stir up any more notoriety in the case.

Little Girl Burned to Death.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Sept. 7.—Eight-year-old Edna A. Smith, the daughter of Henry C. Smith, an employe of the Knickerbocker Press, was burned to death in New Rochelle this morning. The little girl was playing with a bonfire in front of her home, in Webster Avenue, when her skirts accidentally caught fire. Before help could reach her she was a mass of flames. She died a few hours later.

MAN DRAGGED BY AUTO GOING AT 20-MILE CLIP

GAVE POLICE A HOT CHASE

While Robert H. Kirk, a salesman, who was on the way to his home, 164 West Twenty-second Street, yesterday noon, was crossing Seventh Avenue at Twenty-third Street, he was knocked down by a large touring automobile owned by Lloyd S. Bryce, the author and ex-Congressman, of 12 Washington Square North. Mr. Bryce was not in the machine, which, the police say, was going at the rate of twenty miles an hour. When Kirk fell he was caught up in the machinery under the carriage box and dragged a block and a half. His clothing was torn to ribbons, while his body was being pounded on the pavement.

The occupants of the auto were Raymond Feiney, chauffeur, of 234 West Thirty-eighth Street, and Herman Washeim, a machinist, of 1,142 Tiffont Street, the Bronx. The machine had just been repaired and was being tested preliminary to being taken to Mr. Bryce's country home, at Roslyn, L. I.

Kirk had stepped off the sidewalk on the east side of Seventh Avenue, and was about to cross, when he looked south and saw the automobile approaching. He attempted to get across by running briskly, and had gone but slight or ten feet when the auto struck him.

Capt. Daly of the West Twentieth Street Station, who was walking on Seventh Avenue, saw the accident. The Captain says that when the auto struck Kirk the chauffeur put on additional speed. Capt. Daly and Patrolman Bremick, followed by a crowd, ran in pursuit. The auto stopped at Twenty-third Street, after some one had called to the chauffeur that there was a man under his machine. The chauffeur and his companion jumped out and ran west on Twenty-third Street toward Eighth Avenue, with Capt. Daly after them. The policeman went to Kirk's assistance. A crowd lifted the auto while the policeman dragged Kirk out. He had many wounds about the body and head.

About this time the Captain came up with his prisoners and the angry crowd rushed up. Several blows were aimed at the men when Capt. Daly called out:

"Stand back, you men; I am the Police Captain of this precinct. These men are prisoners and must not be harmed."

But the crowd kept trying to get at the prisoners until other policemen came to the rescue and followed the patrol wagon to the station.

When the start was made to the Jefferson Market Court later the Captain had to detail four policemen to protect the prisoners. Both men were held for trial under $2,000 bail each. Kirk is at the New York Hospital and will recover.

Man Can't Be Disorderly in Saloon.

"A man can't be disorderly in a saloon. Discharged," was the verdict of Magistrate Pool, in a case before him in the Tombs Court yesterday. William B. Smith, a negro, of Seventh Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street, was accused by John Struve, a waiter in the Hamilton Club, in Remsen Street, Brooklyn, with acting in a disorderly manner in that he attempted to cut him with a razor while in Cortes's saloon, at 56 West Street.

Cuts that cut down the expense of starting a boy in school.

AUTO RUNS DOWN NEWSBOY.

One Witness Says Machine Was Going Fifteen Miles an Hour.

Harry Silverberg, a thirteen-year-old newsboy, was run over by an automobile on Broadway, near Exchange Place, yesterday afternoon. The boy's ankle was broken, and at the Hudson Street Hospital it was said that he had received internal injuries. In the automobile were S. E. Hutchinson of Philadelphia, the owner, and James A. Forkin, his chauffeur.

The accident was witnessed by a number of brokers, one of whom, F. W. Mensinger of 21 Alabama Avenue, Brooklyn, went to the Tombs Court and testified. He said that the machine was going at about fifteen miles an hour when it struck the boy.

The chauffeur and Mr. Hutchinson testified that the machine was going slowly when the boy, who had an armful of papers, darted across the street. Suddenly, they said, he stopped and looked around and then ran directly in front of the auto. Magistrate Pool said he would have to hold the chauffeur in $500 bail for twenty-four hours to await the result of the boy's injuries. Mr. Hutchinson said he owned no real estate in New York, but would refer the court to Brown Brothers and J. P. Morgan. He compromised, however, by pledging his automobile for the man's appearance. The case was postponed until to-day.

GATES GETS ALTON ROAD AWAY FROM HARRIMAN

RECALLS LOUISVILLE COUP

Second Time That John W. Gates Has Gotten Control of a Railroad in the Open Stock Market.

That E. H. Harriman has lost control of the Chicago and Alton probably to men representing the Rock Island Railroad was the news which agitated Wall Street yesterday. While representatives of the Harriman interests refused to discuss the report, it was fully confirmed in other quarters.

The purchasers are known to be John W. Gates, Edwin Hawley, and one or two others, who acted for the Rock Island Railroad. The purchase has not been made recently, but the control was gradually acquired during the last year, much of the stock having been purchased at the extremely low prices of nearly a year ago. That something had happened to the stock was the conviction which it is supposed prompted E. H. Harriman to get up the famous pool for the stock, under which he proposed to sell the road to some other company, presumably the Union Pacific.

Wall Street has reason to believe that when Harriman found out that there had been heavy absorption of the stock, he decided to make an attempt to get back the control, apparently, under the impression that the purchases had been made by outsiders with no particular purpose in view. These, it was thought, would be glad to accept 90 for their shares, which was more than their market price.

The offer was consequently made to all holders to deposit their stock with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in a sort of blind pool, which should extend until Sept. 30 of this year, and the promise was made that a sale would be arranged to another road on the basis of 90 for the preferred and 50 for the common, provided more than a majority should be deposited. If the plan should fail the stock was to be returned to the depositors.

When Mr. Harriman returned from Europe the other day he was asked what he intended to do with Alton, and he replied that he did not know. It was thought then that he was not ready yet to announce his plans, but it now appears that he was making a frank admission, in that, not having control of the road, he could not tell what would be done with it.

The first news of the change in control came from Chicago, where Charles G. Gates was said to have stated that his father, John W. Gates, and Edwin Hawley and the so-called Rock Island party would block Harriman's plans for the Alton. Mr. Hawley declined to talk about the matter, and John W. Gates was not at his office during the day, but it was learned later from other sources that the story was practically correct, and that, so far as Gates was concerned, he had acted for the Rock Island interests. A representative of the Harriman interests declined to confirm or deny the report, saying merely:

"You had better go and ask Charley Gates. He has been doing the talking."

The Chicago and Alton Railway is the oldest road running between Chicago and St. Louis. Formerly it was the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, but in 1900 the new company leased the old property for ninety-nine years. The total mileage operated is 919. The main line and branches touch such important points as St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, Springfield, Ill., and Peoria.

The outstanding capital stock of the company is $39,086,800, of which $19,542,800 is common and $19,544,000 is preferred. The preferred stock is 4 per cent. non-cumulative. These dividends have been paid semi-annually since January, 1901. The funded debt amounts to $37,815,500.

E. H. Harriman and his associates, namely, George J. Gould, Jacob H. Schiff, and James Stillman, obtained control of the property in 1899 by offering $200 per share for the preferred and $175 per share for the common stock of the old company. The offer was opposed by T. B. Blackstone, then President of the company, but other large stockholders accepted the offer, and all but a small amount of the old stock passed into the hands of the syndicate.

From that moment the road was known as a Harriman property and was administered as such. Mr. Harriman is now Chairman of the Executive Committee, and among the Directors are George J. Gould, D. R. Francis of St. Louis, John J. Mitchell and Norman B. Ream of Chicago, James Stillman, and Mortimer H. Schiff.

On the part of John W. Gates this is the second time that he has executed the remarkable coup of acquiring control of a railroad in the open market without those in control becoming aware of the fact until it was too late. His first successful attempt in that line was the purchase of the control of Louisville and Nashville from right under the eyes of August Belmont. That Gates should have succeeded equally well in deceiving E. H. Harriman is considered by expert market operators and financiers in Wall Street as an achievement for the "dangerous man," as J. Pierpont Morgan called him on the witness stand.

POST OFFICE ROBBED.

Burglars Blow Open Safe at Tannersville and Steal $2,000.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Sept. 8.—The safe in the Tannersville Post Office was blown open early to-day. The burglars secured $2.60 in money and escaped with a horse stolen from the Postmaster. They have been followed to Palenville, where all trace of them was lost.

MEAT STRIKE SETTLED.

President Donnelly Admits Defeat Before Allied Unions.

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—The strike of the butcher workmen, which has demoralized the meat packing industry throughout the country for the last two months, was officially declared off to-night by President Michael J. Donnelly.

This morning Mr. Donnelly telegraphed the members of the National Executive Committee asking their consent to an announcement of the end of the struggle and to-night, having received favorable answers from all, he declared that the strike of the members of his organization would end at midnight.

The strike of the members of the affiliated unions at the stockyards, who quit work in sympathy with the butchers, will be officially called off to-morrow morning at a meeting of the Conference Board of the allied trades.

The general body was at first in favor of continuing the strike, but Mr. Donnelly, who was present, announced that the men were defeated, and that in order to save his union from being entirely disrupted he would order his men to return to work in the morning, no matter what course might be taken by other unions.

As the other unions had no grievance of their own, but had gone on strike to aid the butchers, there was nothing left for them but to follow the lead of Mr. Donnelly, and they, too, decided to call off the strike as far as they were concerned.

During the strike approximately 53,000 persons have been involved in the struggle, which is estimated to have cost the men about $5,100,000 in wages, as against an estimated loss of $7,500,000 to the packers in loss of business and increased expenses.

When the packers were notified to-night that it had been decided to end the strike they announced that they would give places as far as possible to the skilled men. It is expected that the majority of the unskilled men will be unable to secure their places again.

IN QUAGMIRE UP TO NECK.

Brooklyn Man Trying to Cross a Pond Bottom Nearly Suffocated.

For almost an hour yesterday, Alfred Blackner, twenty-two years old, of 705 Henry Street, Brooklyn, was held a prisoner in the quagmire of a pond which is being filled in at Rochester and East New York Avenues. The soft slimy mud was up to his mouth, and Blackner was gasping desperately for breath when he was rescued by some of his companions. He was almost dead from exhaustion, and his condition is critical.

Part of the pond has already been filled in, and, believing it to be solid terra firma, Blackner started to walk across. He had gone only a few feet when the earth began to sink beneath his feet, and in a minute he was waist deep in the mire. Blackner struggled and shouted, but as it was the noon hour the other workmen had gone to lunch and his cries were unheard.

Blackner was fast giving up hope when he was discovered. By this time the mud was almost to his neck, and in his compressed position he was finding it hard to breathe. For several minutes it seemed as if Blackner was a doomed man, for it appeared almost an impossibility to reach him. Boards were finally procured, and on these the rescuers cautiously approached the imprisoned man. His arms were released and then a rope was placed about his body and he was dragged out unconscious. His face and body were fearfully bruised.

'FRISCO STILL SWELTERS.

Forest Fires in State Threaten Great Redwood Preserves.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 8.—The hottest night in San Francisco's history followed the hottest day, and the wilted citizens rose this morning to find it still hotter. At 3 o'clock this afternoon it was 100 degrees by the Weather Bureau record. Later it dropped to 96 degrees and fell to 85 before dark.

Weather Prophet McAdie says the unusual weather here is due to storms and disturbances in Mexico.

The heat was aggravated in the Santa Clara Valley by great forest fires in Santa Cruz County. It is feared to-night that the big basin reserve just north of Santa Cruz will be ruined, as fire has penetrated into the heavy redwood timber, and is beyond control. The State only recently acquired this reserve for a public park and the redwood trees which are being destroyed are among the finest in the State.

Reports from the southern coast show that the high water is subsiding.

CLUNG TO SOARING BALLOON.

Connecticut Girl, Dared by Her Friends, Has Thrilling Experience.

Special to The New York Times.

ANSONIA, Conn., Sept. 8.—While Miss Mabel Kent, a young woman of Shelton, was tangled in the ropes of a balloon in which her friends had dared her to accompany an aeronaut named Hayden at the Orange Fair yesterday, the order was given to cut the balloon loose and 6,000 people saw it rise with Miss Kent clinging to the bar with both hands.

Hayden tried in vain to swing his parachute toward her so that he could assist her, and Miss Kent was unable to reach the cord which would have operated the knife and freed her parachute. It was a fearful strain on the young woman's muscles as the balloon rose to its highest point and traveled over two miles to the east before it gradually descended, landing in a tree forty feet high.

Ladders were secured and the young lady was conveyed back to the fair grounds, where she received an ovation.

CROWD SAW MAN KILLED BY TRAIN AT LARCHMONT

Witnesses Declared That Edhelm Committed Suicide.

PLUNGED IN FRONT OF ENGINE

Nearly a Panic at Station—Father-in-Law Said Only Insanity Could Explain Suicide Theory.

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., Sept. 8.—Erik Lars Didrik Edhelm, general manager for the Cross Leather Goods Company of London, with branches in Broadway and Fifth Avenue, New York, and in Boston, was run down and killed instantly here this evening by the 5:59 local train bound from Stamford to New York.

The accident was witnessed by about twenty-five persons, who said that Edhelm deliberately committed suicide. The fireman of the train said that just as they were slackening speed to stop at Larchmont Edhelm emerged from a strip of woods just east of the station and walked to the middle of the tracks, where he waved his hands above his head as if to say good-bye, and then plunged directly in front of the locomotive. The fireman shouted to the engineer:

"Stop, quick! You are about to kill a man!"

The engineer applied the brakes, but it was too late. The locomotive and the entire train passed over the body and mangled it.

The sight of the accident almost caused a panic at the railroad station, where a large crowd was waiting to take the train to New York. Several of the men screamed and hid their faces. The body was picked up by the train crew and commuters and carried to the Larchmont Station, and was afterward taken to Morgan Brothers' morgue, at New Rochelle. The body was identified by Coroner Wiesendanger, who found in the pockets a commutation ticket and business cards, and also a gun-metal watch with a white leather fob. Fastened to the latter was a Larchmont Yacht Club pin.

Coroner Wiesendanger learned to-night that Mr. and Mrs. Edhelm lived with Mrs. Edhelm's father, John R. Hall, a member of the Board of Trustees of Larchmont. He notified the family by telephone. Besides a young widow the dead man leaves a son only three months old. Mrs. Edhelm, who has been married only two years, is prostrated.

Mr. Edhelm was widely known in Larchmont. He had been a member of the Larchmont Yacht Club for several years, and both he and his wife had entertained frequently here. About a year ago Mrs. Edhelm's stepmother, Mrs. John R. Hall, gave a large reception at her home in Beach Avenue in honor of Mrs. B. B. Odell, Jr., wife of Gov. Odell, which was attended by about 200 women of the manor.

Mr. Edhelm was a member of several New York clubs, including the New York Athletic Club. His father-in-law, Mr. Hall, visited the morgue to-night and positively identified the body. He said that Mr. Edhelm was at the yacht club this afternoon and went over to the station with a party of friends to see them off to New York on the 5:28 train. Mr. Hall declared that if Mr. Edhelm had committed suicide he was undoubtedly insane, as there was no cause for the act. Mr. Edhelm was thirty-four years old and was a native of Christina, Sweden, and had been in this country twenty years. He had lived in Larchmont for the past three years.

FREEZING OUT LOCKJAW.

Omaha Boy Being Treated in Chilling Brewery Atmosphere.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 8.—Lying on a cot in the big chillroom of the Jetter Brewery, with the temperature at freezing point, and with a trained nurse and physicians constantly at his bedside, Francis, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John McKeen of South Omaha is battling for his life against lockjaw, with excellent chances for his recovery.

The attack, brought on by a splinter in the boy's foot, began on Friday, and on Monday convulsions came on. As soon as he was taken to the cold room the attacks ceased only to come on again when the boy was taken home. The physician had him taken back again, and Wednesday the convulsions disappeared entirely.

To-day the boy was able to open his mouth and take nourishment. The physicians say he will recover, and that the chillroom treatment will save his life.

BURGLARS THREW ACID.

Girl Who Found Them in Room Will Be Scarred for Life.

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—Miss Mabel McPherson of 1,218 Sheridan Road discovered two burglars in her room early this morning. They threw the contents of a bottle containing carbolic acid upon her, burning her face and neck.

Miss McPherson is a sister-in-law of Benjamin F. Crawford, President of the National Biscuit Company, and was visiting at his home on Sheridan Road. She will recover, but will be scarred for life. The burglars secured a quantity of silverware and jewelry and escaped.

BIG EAGLE VISITS BROOKLYN.

Scorns Mere Man Who Tries to Shoot It on Church Spire.

Brooklyn enjoyed the honor of a visit from a big American eagle yesterday. The bird of freedom alighted on the spire of the South Congregational Church, at Court and President Streets, and perched there for some time.

A man living in the neighborhood got out a shotgun and fired two shots at the bird, but failed to hit it. With an air which seemed to express scorn and contempt, the great bird spread its wings, soared grandly into the blue, and was soon a swiftly vanishing speck against the Western sky.

Roosevelt Odds Shorter.

Believers in the success of Judge Parker in November recovered somewhat from the unexpectedly large victory of the Republicans in Vermont and Arkansas on Tuesday, and several wagers were made. The odds at first swung back to 5½ to 10, at which figures two bets of $2,000 to $1,100 were closed. Bunnell, Buchanan & Co. and J. J. Judge took the Roosevelt end and I. Stern and G. A. Gumbert the Parker side. At the close Roosevelt money was offered at 2 to 1, but no bets at these odds were reported.

KILLED PRAYING AT GRAVE.

Monument in a Brooklyn Cemetery Falls on Young Girl.

Yetta Berkowitz, eighteen years old, of 80 Chrystie Street, was killed yesterday in Washington Cemetery, at Twenty-second and Gravesend Avenues, Brooklyn, by the falling over of a granite monument. She had gone to the cemetery to visit the graves of some of her relatives, and was kneeling in prayer on one of them when the monument fell.

The monument consisted of a shaft four feet high, weighing several hundred pounds. It fell across the girl's head, pinning her to the ground, where she remained until two gravediggers found her several minutes later. She was then unconscious, but Dr. Herseman was called from the Norwegian Hospital to attend her. She died before he arrived.

Detectives Cullen and Wedd went to the cemetery and decided that the accident was due to the digging nearby the monument of about fifty new graves, which had caused the earth to settle, throwing the monument out of plumb. They arrested two of the gravediggers on a technical charge. The prisoners gave their names as Jacob Binswanger and Michael Goldsmith.

WARNS PERSONS AGAINST SON.

Chancellor Andrews Will Not Pay Debts Incurred by Him.

Special to The New York Times.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 8.—Guy A. Andrews, a son of E. Benjamin Andrews, Chancellor of the University of Nebraska, was last Spring committed to the State Hospital for the Insane on representations sworn to by his father as to his mental condition. The treatment, it was declared, was for dipsomania, and recently he was discharged as cured. To-day, however, Chancellor Andrews caused the following to be published:

Notice and Caution.—The just debts of Guy A. Andrews contracted before Aug. 20th, 1904, being duly certified and presented within reasonable time, will be paid by me. All persons are, however, warned against trusting or loaning said Guy A. Andrews on my account, of cashing checks bearing his name, because, save as above, I will not liquidate any indebtedness by him incurred. E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS.

Young Andrews is well educated and until recently was a practicing lawyer of Lincoln.

BRYCE TO STUDY CAMPAIGN.

Author of "American Commonwealth" Arrives in Boston.

BOSTON, Sept. 8.—James Bryce, M. P., arrived here to-day on the steamship Saxonia from Liverpool. He will be the guest here for the next two weeks of Percival Lowell of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology before going to St. Louis to attend the Educational Congress.

On his return here he will deliver a course of lectures at Harvard. Mr. Bryce plans to stay in this country until after the Presidential election, of which he means to make a study.

ROOSEVELT WANTS WARRIORS.

Military Schools Must Give More Time to Drill and Marksmanship.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—The War Department has sent out new instructions to military colleges where army officers are detailed. Girard and St. Joseph's Colleges have received theirs.

In a general way the instructions demand a higher grade of efficiency in the students, lack of which will mean the withdrawal of military officers. More time must be given to drill and to marksmanship.

It is understood that President Roosevelt is behind the order, and that he wishes the education of a large body of men ready for military duty on emergency. Graduates of such schools will be preferred for education in West Point, and will have other encouragement offered to them for efficiency.

CLARA WARD MAY RETURN.

Ex-Princess to Go on Stage Here, Chicago Lawyer Announces.

Clara Ward, the ex-Princess of Chimay, is coming back to America, according to the announcement made by Adolph Marks, a Chicago lawyer who arrived here yesterday on the steamship Pennsylvania. Mr. Marks says he has a contract signed by her for a vaudeville engagement.

The lawyer said one of her main objects in coming here was to fight through the courts the persons who had her pronounced insane in Michigan, and who tied up the fortune left by her father, the Michigan lumber merchant. She would first go on the stage, the lawyer said, and after convincing the public that she was not insane would institute legal proceedings to get the income from the estate. Lawyer Marks said that the ex-Princess would receive $1,000 a week from Ben Harris, one of his clients. She will arrive some time in January, he said.

NEGROES WOULD BE JURORS.

Vicksburg Blacks Demand Permission to Serve in Murder Trials.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 8.—The negroes of Vicksburg, Miss., have made a demand for permission to serve on the jury on white and black murder trials. The matter was taken under advisement, with little chance for the negroes.

The Constitution of Mississippi prohibits any person from the jury service who cannot read or write. The law was specially aimed at the black population, which has furnished few jurors since 1890.

The United States Supreme Court refused to set aside a verdict rendered against a negro murderer, who maintained that his sentence was illegal because no negroes served at his trial. He was executed, and since that time Mississippi negroes remained satisfied with jury duty until several of the educated blacks became thrilled with President Roosevelt's negro policy.

GEORGIA RACE WAR IMMINENT.

"Before Day" Clubhouse Burned—Negroes Arm and Organize.

PAVO, Ga., Sept. 8.—A clash between whites and blacks is imminent. The whites are alleged by the negroes to have burned a hall in which a "Before Day" club was supposed to meet.

The negroes have organized in armed bands outside the town and sent challenges to the whites, who are sleeping on their guns in anticipation of an attack.

Moultrie has been called on for assistance and the militia there is ready to go at a moment's notice.

RUSSIANS BEATEN, NOT ROUTED

They Make the Possession of Liao-Yang Cost Their Foes an Awful Price in Lives.

WITH THE JAPANESE LEFT ARMY, Sept. 7, (via Tien-Tsin.)—On Aug. 25 the Japanese army was ready for the final operation against the Russian concentration, the main force of which was believed to be at Liao-Yang.

The obvious strategy was for Gen. Kuroki to strike the Russian communications north of Liao-Yang while the remaining divisions attacked from the south.

Immediately the outposts came into touch four miles north of Hai-Cheng. Gen. Oku was opposed by a Russian rear guard sent to delay him. This force delayed the advance three days, its efforts being aided by the weather, which made the roads in a terrible condition.

On Aug. 29 the headquarters halted, while the advance guard felt the Russian front.

Gen. Oku's Costly Contempt.

The 30th opened threateningly, and found the Japanese army deployed under cover of the corps, facing seven hills which the Russians held.

It was evident from the outset that Gen. Oku's recent successes had caused him to despise the staying power of the enemy, for, without waiting for adequate preparation, he pushed his infantry down to the limit of the standing crops which had not come under the Russians' precautionary sickles.

The Russians, from rocky eminences, could get occasional glimpses of the snake-like infantry columns, and they opened an accurate shrapnel fire from four gun positions, which throughout the two days' fighting had remained masked.

The Russian tactics at Liao-Yang were a revelation for which Gen. Oku had to pay dearly.

As the Russian guns opened, Japanese batteries distributed along the front began to shell the crests which looked likely to be gun positions, but the shelling that day had no effect on the defenders' fire beyond increasing its intensity.

Infantry Rushed to Slaughter.

After an artillery duel lasting all day, which must have been more serious to the attack than to the defense, the divisional commanders were ordered to press the infantry forward at dusk. The movement was prepared by heavy artillery fire, in which the Japanese had 160 field guns and sixty howitzers engaged. Against this the Russians returned a united fire from probably forty-eight field guns, from which the fire was indirect.

The result of this infantry advance was abortive. Gallantly the little infantrymen responded in groups of twelve, their formation for such an attack, and pressed up toward the inferno prepared for them.

The leading battalions of the Fourth and Sixth Divisions essayed the approaches to the rock eminence, but a sheet of lead from a loopholed village at the base of the eminence and from supporting trenches swept them back, and they were fain to dig themselves into the soft mud on the fringe of the standing corn.

The Third Division, with the gallant Thirty-fourth Regiment leading, made a similar attempt nearer the centre, but the result was the same harrowing slaughter.

First Laurels with Russians.

On the Russian left the right brigade of the Third Division and the Fifth Division had made better progress, though this even was little, and, considering the disparity of the rival forces, the laurels rested with the Russians.

But the Japanese art of war counsels persistency, and in spite of the failure of the first attack another was ordered, to begin at 2 o'clock the following morning.

The cold, gray morning witnessed another scene of slaughter on the Russian right, as the defenders again hurled the attack back. Enfilading fire on every salient swept each rush away before the men could even lay hands on the entanglements.

Japanese Guns Defeat Japanese.

The Fifth Division had more success against the Russian left. The position here was composed of a brush-covered hog's-back, sloping to the east, defended by a triple line of trenches, with the glacis protected by ten feet of entanglement covering a honeycomb of pits containing spikes at the bottoms.

The lower feature of this hill was a salient, but the upper works were flanked by a conical hill in front, which acted as a bastion, and was cunningly intrenched.

In the semi-darkness of the morning the Forty-first Regiment carried this under feature after losing 75 out of 100 pioneers, who hacked their way through the entanglements with axes. The men, rushing through the gap, overpowered the sentries in the trenches before the supports sleeping in splinter-proofs behind could reinforce them, but daybreak brought a tragedy of a kind which is common in modern war.

Shell fire, believed to be from Japanese guns, drove this gallant storming party from its hold, filling the Russian trenches with Japanese dead.

Thus at the hour after sunrise the positions of the defense and the attack on this front were practically in statu quo.

Heard Boom of Kuroki's Guns.

All the preceding day I had heard the sound of the Tenth Division's guns and a more muffled booming to the northeast, which, I conjectured, came from Kuroki's guns, but it would seem certain that Gen. Kuropatkin had concentrated his main force previously in an endeavor to crush Gen. Kuroki, and that thereby the main feature of the Japanese strategical plan had failed.

Anyway, as far as we could judge, neither the Tenth Division nor Gen. Kuroki had made any perceptible progress in the five days of fighting, and we know that after the second day the Russians had only held Gens. Oku and Nodzu with a rear guard.

On the 31st the weather was fine, and the energy of this southern attack all the morning was concentrated in artillery fire on the bushy hill that had been won and lost.

Attack on Rocky Heights.

At 10 o'clock we could see the Fifth Division moving against the Russian left. The slow, creeping work of this division had enabled it to approach within nearer range of the enemy, and its little hand howitzers, which weapons accompany every infantry brigade, were now brought up to support the firing line.

They massed against the rocky excrescences, which gave cover from the Russian artillery fire, until the preparations seemed complete. Then they extended down the inner and outer slope of the ridge in company columns, single file, shoulder to shoulder, lying down.

At 11:45 the advanced lines broke into groups of twelve and began a series of rushes, according to the usual method of Japanese infantry attack. After making a short rush the men lie down. They do not fire their rifles, support coming from the supports in the rear. In this case the firing line was thrown out along the actual crest which divided the two attacking lines.

Hill Seems Like a Volcano.

There is a moment's intense excitement, while the summit of the Russian position is like a miniature Mont Pelée in eruption owing to the bursting of dozens of shimose shells. The head of the assault is in a gap in the entanglements. The artillery is supporting the assault.

Three or four ground mines explode in the midst of the leading assaulting groups. Then, as the smoke clears, black-coated Russians are seen leaving the position.

In a moment the Japanese are in, and the whole of the lines in support on the crest are firing down the slope into the retreating Russians.

Japanese Like Swarming Bees.

But one swallow does not make a Summer. Although the under feature of the bushy hill was carried, the rest of the assault failed miserably. No Japanese could live within 500 yards of the bastion hill, and though the Japanese groups were so numerous that I can liken them only to swarming bees, it was only to be swept backward into cover again, leaving behind the heavy price of their valor.

The handful of men who seized the hill were able to hold it, but they could not advance an inch, and thus the afternoon wore on.

All along the line no movement could be traced except the moving nearer in of some few Japanese batteries. The artillery duel, however, continued unabated.

Along the fringe of the Japanese front individual infantrymen had crept forward and dug themselves in where mounds or water courses made it possible to escape the searching fire of the Russian rifles, while all the time the Russian shrapnel was causing hundreds of casualties in the flats.

Oku Sends Men to Slaughter.

But Gen. Oku was growing desperate. From the position of the Fifth Division it was evident that the Tenth Division and Gen. Kuroki were making no headway, so Gen. Oku determined upon a third general assault that night.

Just think of it, the third in twenty-four hours! But all day he had been moving his reserves up into the firing line. At 7 o'clock the whole strength of the Japanese artillery began a rapid fire, in preparation of the whole position, taking it in sections. This continued an hour, and afterward, for the third time, the infantry were hurled against the position.

In general the assault was a repetition of all the previous assaults, except in one portion of the line. For the rest, there was gruesome evidence the following morning to show how, like hares in snares the heroic infantry had struggled into the barbed-wire entanglements to die; how, blundering in the darkness, sections had thrown themselves down thirty yards from the flaring line of muzzles whose flashes marked the spot they were never to win.

One Scene in the Shambles.

But the first battalion of the Thirty-fourth Regiment, which for forty-eight hours had been lying in the scrub at the foot of the green glacis of the centre hill, broke the rough abbatis and entanglements, and, in spite of a flanking fire which swept away group after group, had enough endurance to reach the first trench.

What happened there none know, but in the morning, when we viewed the positions, Russians and Japanese were lying intermingled waist deep in the ditch, while from the parapet to the entanglement, perhaps 150 yards, a thick trail of prostrate khaki told a tale no pen can describe.

Everywhere again the assault had failed.

The divisional telephones told headquarters the desperate news, but the Japanese infantry are not to know failure. The laconic reply was:

"Reinforce and assault again before daybreak."

Russians Begin Their Retreat.

But the curtain had already fallen on the first act of the drama. Whether shaken by the repeated attacks, fearful for the left flank, or finding that Gen. Kuroki could be held with difficulty from his communications, Gen. Kuropatkin, who was present in person, countenanced a general withdrawal from the position about midnight.

So the Japanese occupied the whole works in the morning up to the second position without striking another blow, while the Russians fell back to their third line, leaving seven prisoners entombed in a trench in Japanese hands.

These, with the position and a portion of the Russian dead were the net results of this negative victory, which, at the lowest computation, cannot have cost much less than 10,000 casualties.

Kuropatkin Beaten, Not Routed.

Gen. Kuropatkin was beaten, but not routed by any means, in spite of the Japanese official report that the Russians fled panic stricken from the field.

When the position was found to be evacuated it was thought that the Japanese Army would march into Liao-Yang immediately, but this was not so. There were to be forty-eight hours more of sanguinary struggle before Gen. Kuropatkin withdrew, a struggle which cost the Japanese more casualties than they suffered during the capture of the first position.

tion an hour and a half before the first Japanese entered, at 3 A. M. on Sept. 4, follow to-morrow.

Sept. 8.

The general impression on the morning of Sept. 1 was that we had only to advance to occupy Liao-Yang, but when Gen. Oku's infantry began to feel the town they found that the enemy by no means intended to abandon it without a struggle.

As the infantry began the advance artillery opened fire from three positions in front of the town, and by 9 o'clock it was realized that the two forces had settled down to another stubborn battle. The progress made by Gen. Oku during the day was slow. The Fifth Division, part of Gen. Nodzu's command, made better progress.

Trains had been seen leaving all day, and again the rear guard, having completed its duty, retired.

Terrible Fire of the Artillery.

Gen. Oku again ordered one of those terrific artillery preparations which precede a Japanese infantry assault. It seemed that everything before it must be annihilated and that nothing could live.

Just as the fire reached its zenith all along the line the three Russian artillery positions burst into answering flame, and the Japanese were surrounded with bursts of rapid shrapnel fire. The Russians were not done with yet.

That night the attachés were informed that Gen. Oku had ordered a general attack which, was destined to be final. The promised attack did not take place till just before sunrise on Sept. 3. Reports say it was desperate, but failed, with considerable loss.

It was evident from the increased vehemence of the Japanese artillery fire that morning that Gen. Oku had received information which determined him to roll up the Russian line, no matter at what cost.

The Russians still maintained fire from their three groups of guns. Between 9 and 10 o'clock we witnessed a magnificent artillery duel. The Japanese concentrated their fire on each Russian battery position in turn, and seemed to turn their immediate vicinities to Hades, the bursting shells raising dense columns of smoke and dust.

Japanese Again Beaten Back.

Out of the smoke, however, still came answering flashes, as, despite everything, the Russian gunners doggedly returned the fire with fast work from their quick-firers.

At 10:20 the Japanese artillery fire ceased, and it was evident that another attempt at a general advance was to be made. We could see that the infantry had howitzers supporting the advance until the last moment, when fire in the background gave evidence that Gen. Kuroki's Tenth Division was endeavoring to complete the ruin upon which Gen. Oku was so intent.

But Gen. Oku's attempt was only a repetition of the ghastly carnage. The Fifth Division, however, made better way. We could see the infantry of this gallant unit among the trees and outhouses of the Chinese suburb, and even saw dark-coated Russian infantry coming back.

In a moment it seemed that the Japanese infantry would be into the Russian battery on the left which we had admired so much, but the line of Russian trenches stayed the Japanese rush, and their gallantry only went to swell the tale of casualties.

Inferno for Russian Rear Guard.

Gen. Oku, however, would not brook failure. Shortly before 11 o'clock the artillery preparations began.

This time, I do not hesitate to say, it was the severest concentrated artillery fire the world has ever seen.

Every gun belonging to the Japanese corps concentrated a rapid fire on the left of Gen. Kuropatkin's position, namely, on the section immediately in front of the Russian settlement at the angle of the city wall. It was a magnificent yet awful and awe-inspiring spectacle. The Shimose shells burst and threw great columns of black and yellow smoke into the air.

In a moment the roofs of the Russian godowns (warehouses) and station buildings shot up into flame. Pillars of dense cloud formed as a pall above the settlement, yet the blackness of this sombre canopy was relieved by countless sparkling flashes and white puffs of bursting shrapnel, till the whole mottled mass obscured from view the town behind.

Nothing could live under this, we said. The Russian resistance had come to an end.

Heroic Stand of Czar's Gunners.

Satisfied themselves that the Russians were silenced, the gunners rested from their work of devastation and slaughter, when suddenly, out of the midst of the smoke and murky dust left from the reeking shrapnel, came counter-flashes from two or three heroic Russian batteries.

One felt inclined to cheer, but it seemed it was their last effort, a magnificent farewell to the enemy they had balked so long.

Heavy rifle fire continued all the afternoon. It was effective, if one could judge by the constant passing toward the firing line of strings of Chinese stretcher bearers.

We had evidence that Liao-Yang would be abandoned, but it seemed certain that, though defeated and forced by superior numbers, superior artillery, and to some extent superior troops, Gen. Kuropatkin had in turn defeated Japanese strategy, for, as far as we could learn, Gen. Kuroki was still fighting to get astride, instead of being astride, the Russians' communications.

Successful at Last.

That evening the remaining Russians in the trenches still kept the Japanese at bay, but the iron-minded Oku, little recking that his fierce assaults had already cost him close to 20,000 men, determined upon a final enveloping assault.

The last reserves were pushed in, and at 3 A. M. the Japanese army, after five days of the fiercest fighting the world has seen since the American civil war, seized the railway bridge and were in occupation of Liao-Yang.

Gen. Kuropatkin, with the last of the Tenth Siberian Rifles, had left at 1:30 A. M.

AS SEEN FROM KUROKI'S SIDE.

Correspondents Had Splendid View of Stupendous Artillery Duel.

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, Aug. 30, via Fu-San, Sept. 8.—The artillery battle which thundered before Liao-Yang to-day from early morning until darkness hid foe from foe was certainly one of the most stupendous and spectacular of history. The combined armies of Japan, with the exception of a part of the force under Gen. Kuroki, concentrated their batteries against the Russian lines under Gen. Kuropatkin, and several hundred guns, probably not less than 300 upon each side, were worked incessantly for twelve hours.

Even after nightfall and in the driving storm of wind and rain that swept over the field of battle the conflict did not cease entirely, for Russian shells are to-night bursting over the hills before the Japanese positions.

Sixty Shots a Minute.

Not alone the number of guns in action, but their unceasing and rapid fire, made the conflict of to-day remarkable. For several hours the cannonading averaged sixty shots a minute, and the rate seldom fell below twenty shots a minute.

From a high mountain almost over the nearest Russian batteries the foreign attachés and newspaper correspondents with Gen. Kuroki's army had a view of fighting which will probably never be surpassed.

Liao-Yang, a small Chinese walled city, with a gray pagoda towering from its centre, stands on the southern bank of the Tai-Tse River. The observers noted the yellow roofs of military storehouses on the outskirts of the city. From the city the river sweeps in a broad curve to the southeast road, and then takes a turn to the north. To the northwest of Liao-Yang there extends a great plain, while to the east and south, range upon range, are the mountains through which the Japanese armies advanced to the theatre of one of the decisive battles of this struggle.

Positions of the Guns.

Some of the Russian guns were aligned in an almost unbroken horseshoe around the plain to the south and east of Liao-Yang; others were posted about five miles from the city; still other detached batteries were facing the west from a group of hills on the extreme Russian right, while other ranges of hills behind the city, facing the east bank of the river, furnished positions for the Russian batteries protecting the railroad and the rear of the army.

The Japanese guns in the mountains formed an irregular arc twenty miles or more in length.

The foregoing description roughly outlines the artillery positions of the two armies and the scheme of defense and attack.

While the landscape, viewed from the elevation where the correspondents and foreign attachés had taken their positions, appeared to be modeled on broad lines; in reality the country is irregular, with many hills and ravines and much rolling plain, all of which affected the strategic disposition of the contending forces.

Looking down upon so vast a scene of operations, with so many batteries participating, it was often impossible to discern the details of positions or what units were opposed to each other. In some places the Russian guns appeared to be arranged in tiers, two or three batteries being placed one above the other.

Powder Absolutely Smokeless.

The whole Russian front was bordered with twinkling lights, these being the flashes from the guns. Much of the artillery was in skilfully covered positions, and absolutely smokeless powder was used.

Clusters of white shrapnel smoke broke out fitfully around some Japanese positions in the mountains, and then drifted slowly away, showing that often two or three batteries upon either side were pitted against one another.

The nearer ridges of the mountains and the edge of the plain were constantly dotted with sudden flashes of white smoke from exploding shells, and the sound that came to the ears of the observers was as a continuous rumble of thunder, varied by successions of sharp peals as two or three batteries united and fired together.

Throughout the day the positions of the opposing forces were but little changed, and at nightfall the honors appeared to be even.

The Japanese infantry which was massed behind the hills, was often under severe fire, especially when the Russians discerned regiments advancing from one point to another.

There was some infantry fighting on the hills bordering the plain.

Bodies of Russian troops could be seen marching about Liao-Yang with the appearance of great activity, and one Russian column, composed of several regiments of cavalry, moved out to the left of the Russian rear as though to protect the retreat of the main body.

BATTLEFIELD A PERFECT HELL.

A Russian Description—Japanese Shelled Comrades by Mistake.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 8.—A Russian correspondent of The Associated Press, in a graphic description of the fighting at Liao-Yang, says:

"Only the Russian soldiers' traditional splendid qualities enabled them to support the terrible conditions, of which lack of sleep was the most unbearable. The Japanese availed themselves to the utmost of the rain and darkness and did not cease fighting, their night attacks testing Russian endurance severely.

"The Japanese suffered terribly, but made light of their losses. They continually drafted fresh reserves into the ranks to replace the wornout men.

"Indeed, the numerical superiority of the Japanese is astounding and incomprehensible, for, after losing enough men at Port Arthur and elsewhere to form a perfect army, their effective strength appears only to increase, and they still are concentrating fresh bodies of troops on the Liao River.

"The battlefield was a perfect hell. Gen. Stakelberg was wounded, but, despising death, he remained immovable at his post throughout the day, regardless of the rain of shot around him. Several officers of his staff were killed or wounded. In the evening Gen. Stakelberg notified Gen. Kuropatkin that he could hold the position or take the offensive if necessary.

"Among the incidents of the day was the slaughter of two Japanese battalions, which were pursued through the Chinese corn and grass to Saitzza and surrounded by the Russians. They resolutely refused to accept quarter, preferring death.

"In another part of the field the Japanese shelled and captured by assault one of the Russian trenches, only to find too late that it had been abandoned by the Russians and occupied by their comrades. They fell upon the prostrate bodies and flooded them with tears.

"In one case a party of Japanese officers found a body of their men retiring in disorder, and drove them back to the battlefield at the point of the sword.

"The Russian Frontier Guards died at their posts, refusing to surrender. It was the anniversary of the creation of their regiment, which they had celebrated the previous night. They lost a large proportion of their officers.

"At many points the combatants stoned each other.

"Of late the Russians have learned to mask their batteries more effectually, and thus have gained a sensible advantage over the Japanese. The Russians worship their guns, and, to quote Gen. Kuropatkin's admonition: 'Soldiers, die for your guns as you would for your flag.'

"The pits which the Russians had dug in the Chinese corn and the grass were filled with Japanese corpses, which were trodden over by their comrades. The ground was so thickly strewn with bodies in one fight that the Japanese raised a white flag and sought permission to bury their dead, but this was refused.

"The Russian evacuation of the forts and intrenchments was carried out without loss. The troops crossed the river on pontoon and railway bridges in perfect order and safety, burning the bridges after them.

"Liao-Yang is enveloped in flames, and clouds of smoke from the conflagration are visible [illegible]

JAPANESE MAY BE NORTH OF MUKDEN

Dispatch Tells of Movement Toward Tie-Ling.

KUROPATKIN UNDER STRAIN

Rumor That Gen. Kuroki Has Been Killed—No Definite News About Movements of Armies.

MUKDEN, Sept. 8.—The terrible rains hinder the movements of both armies, but there is an interesting movement toward Tie-Ling (north of Mukden.) News of a battle at some point between Shakhe (11 miles northwest of Liao-Yang) and Mukden was hourly expected yesterday morning, but the fighting has now ceased and the Russian transport and army are moving without interruption.

There is much uncertainty concerning the movements and purposes of the Japanese. It is impossible to say definitely yet whether there will be another battle here or further north.

Gen. Kuropatkin is evidently not seeking to renew the battle, but if challenged he will not decline an engagement.

Report of Kuroki's Death.

Among the reports current here is one to the effect that Gen. Kuroki has been killed and that two Japanese Generals have been made prisoners, but no one seems to know where the reports originated, and no confirmation of them is obtainable.

ST. PETERSBURG, Friday, Sept. 9.—A dispatch from Gen. Kuropatkin, sent from Mukden at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening, has been received. He reported that Gen. Kuroki's army was about twenty-seven miles eastward of the railroad, and that Gen. Oku's army was twenty miles west of the railroad.

Gen. Kuropatkin announced that the whole of his army had arrived at Mukden and was taking up positions around the city, and added that the army had not lost a gun during the retreat.

It is evident that Kuropatkin is taking precaptions to prevent the Japanese from creeping around his flanks, as he reports that the Japanese cavalry is actively scouting wide on his flanks. The Japanese are reported to be moving up about thirty miles on either side of the railroad with the view of surrounding Mukden.

Beside the formation of two fresh army corps as the first answer to the Japanese success at Liao-Yang, the Russian Army at the front will be reorganized, probably in the form of two armies, in command of Gen. Linevitch and Gen. Baron Kaulbars, respectively, with Gen. Kuropatkin as Commander in Chief.

Gen. Kaulbars will go out with the two army corps now organizing in the Governments of Kazan, Odessa, Vilna, and Kieff. Gen. Linevitch has been ordered by telegraph from Vladivostok to Mukden.

This decision is due in part, doubtless, to the growing unwieldiness of the big force under Gen. Kuropatkin's command, and which will be largely increased by constant reinforcements.

Gen. Kuropatkin heretofore has handled every detail of the vast organization. The work is too much for one man, and he is now almost broken down under the strain.

It is known that the Emperor is personally one of Kuropatkin's strong supporters, and it is thought the General will in all probability retain chief command of the two armies. Kuropatkin, however, has been seriously criticised by some of the Emperor's close military advisers, and it is possible that he may eventually be superseded.

English Critics Are Puzzled.

LONDON, Friday, Sept. 9.—What is termed Japan's "impenetrable silence" reduces English comment on the events at the seat of war to a minimum. In view of the continued silence of Tokio, which alone can throw light on the tense situation, the English critics satisfy themselves by forecasting an impending great battle at Mukden or its vicinity.

The fanatical disregard for death displayed on both sides and the ability to keep an army in being, either from offensive or defensive point of view and under conditions considered here to be prohibitive, has done more to convince the English press of the desperate character of the struggle being waged in the Far East than all the dispatches that have emanated from Tokio or St. Petersburg declaring that neither the Japanese nor the Russians will ever give in.

In place of endeavoring to follow the minute progress of the campaign, this morning's newspapers somewhat hopelessly devote editorials preparing the English public to be witnesses that the war will be longer drawn out and more terrible in every respect than any within recent centuries.

The Daily Telegraph believes that Gen. Kuropatkin, "owing to the peril of his rear guard or the prostration of his troops, has paused in his retreat and turned for battle," while The Standard thinks that a battle is now in progress. But as The Daily Telegraph says, the whole problem "lies at present between dark and daylight."

The Standard's Tientsin correspondent says that reports from Kwangning, an important Manchurian city, west of the Liao River, say that lawlessness and brigandage are rapidly increasing there. Many districts are terrorized, and robbery and violence prevail everywhere, the authorities not making any attempts to repress it.

KUROPATKIN'S LOSSES 17,000.

Russian Official Estimate of the Casualties at Liao-Yang.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 8.—The best information of the War Office indicates that Gen. Kuropatkin lost about 17,000 men during the ten days' battle at Liao-Yang.

One hundred and eighty-four battalions of infantry, 128 squadrons of cavalry, and 372 guns.

ODESSA, Sept. 4.—There is a strong suspicion that the news from the seat of war is being tampered with more freely than usual by the censorship.

The number of telegrams from abroad, particularly London, has latterly shrunk appreciably.

The sub-departments at Odessa, Kieff, Moscow, and elsewhere have been strictly prohibited from allowing foreign journals to reach their destinations before the receipt from St. Petersburg by telegraph of the [illegible] excision and [illegible] day.

JAPANESE COLUMN BLOWN UP.

Nearly Seven Hundred Men Destroyed by a Russian Land Mine.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 9, (Friday,) 1:30 A. M.—A Japanese column, numbering approximately 700 men, while marching along at night on a road in the valley between Long Hill and Division Hill, met a frightful disaster through the explosion of an electric land mine, Sept. 1.

The mine was carefully laid by the Russians three weeks ago. It covered nearly a mile of available marching space.

The explosive was placed at the bottom. Rocks were placed next, and on top of these clay was packed so carefully that the ground gave the impression of not having been disturbed.

The indications of Japanese activity in this vicinity put the Russians on guard. Near midnight the outposts rushed in and reported that the Japanese were approaching.

The Russians withheld their fire for some time. Suddenly they threw a searchlight up the valley. The Japanese opened with a rifle fire.

The Russians waited until apparently the whole Japanese column was in the danger zone. Then the mine was exploded.

The force of the explosion knocked a number of Russians down, and the sight of Japanese rifles, water bottles, legs and arms hurling through the lighted space made by the searchlight was an awful one. Some rocks landed inside the Russian lines.

There was one appalling moment, during which the garrison itself was stunned, then a deathlike silence. The searchlight coldly lighted up the road and hillsides strewn with dead.

The following day the Russians buried the dead, but owing to their dismembered and mutilated condition the Russians were unable to accurately estimate the number of killed. A few Japanese escaped, however.

The foregoing information is contained in a small sheet issued Sept. 3 by the Port Arthur Novakrai, a breakage in the press having made it impossible to issue a full edition. A Chinese arriving here at midnight confirms the above to the extent of saying that he heard a report that many Japanese had been killed by a mine, but he did not learn the details.

On the nights of Aug. 26 and 27 a similar disaster befell the Japanese near Redoubt No. 2, it is reported, but details have not been ascertained.

REPUBLIC WANTED IN CHINA.

Hongkong Editor Says Japanese Victory Will Mean Great Changes.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 8.—Thirty members of the Chinese Masonic organization of Pittsburg heard an address in their native tongue at a meeting held in Morehead Hall this afternoon. The meeting was presided over by Lee Cok Tong, and the speaker was Sun Yat Sen, editor of a Hongkong newspaper.

His address was on the present conditions in China, which he said are ripe for revolution. He said that the intelligent Chinese wanted to model the Government after that of the United States, and that the downfall of the Manchu dynasty is certain. He said that these changes are being openly advocated in China, and the Government is unable to prevent it.

He told his hearers that the Japanese would surely win the war, but that the present victories are but the beginning of a general change of conditions, and also of the map of the Orient.

BIG RAID ON MOONSHINERS.

Eleven Stills Captured in North Carolina and Much Spirits Destroyed.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Sept. 8.—Reports of a large number of raids against moonshiners in the surrounding mountains reached here to-day. Eleven big mountain stills were captured. Ten thousand gallons of corn whisky and brandy were destroyed. All the stills were cut to pieces by the officers.

There were several highly exciting raids and many shots were fired on both sides. Some of the moonshiners' wives and children were taken by the revenue officers, and more than a dozen moonshiners were captured.

More moonshining is reported to be going on now in the mountains than perhaps ever before, and much trouble is looked for. The apple crop is the largest known in years, and much brandy is being made by the moonshiners.

PRINCESS LOUISE NEAR PARIS.

Relatives Said to be Anxious to Hush Up Scandal.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—The romance of Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg is now reaching a decisive phase.

I have good reason to believe that both the Princess and her champion, Count Matatich, have been stopping since last Sunday at M. Henri de Nousanne's country house, at Ormoy-Villers, which is a small village in the Department of the Oise, about twenty-four miles from Paris.

Here the Princess has, I am told, been visited by French specialists, who are prepared to certify that she is sane. Her whereabouts will probably be proclaimed to-morrow or the day after, and then it is likely that the long series of scandals connected with her name will be brought to a close, as her relatives seem anxious to hush matters up.

PARK SUICIDE IDENTIFIED.

Young Woman Who Took Acid Was Miss Millie Kruger, Manicure.

After lying in the Bellevue Morgue for nearly a week, the body of the young woman who committed suicide by taking acid in Central Parw last Friday was identified last night as that of Miss Millie Kruger, twenty-five years old, who it is supposed lived at 107 East Eighty-fourth Street. She is said to have been a manicure, who became despondent because a man she said promised to marry her did not keep his word.

The identification was made by a man and woman who gave their names as "Mr. and Mrs. John Williams," and said they lived at 111 West Thirty-sixth Street. That is the Marlborough Hotel, and it was said there that no one of the name of "[illegible]iams" was stopping there or was known. The couple said that the young woman had lived with them and that they saw her last about three weeks ago.

CALLED INSANE; WANT DIVORCE

Des Moines Woman Says Husband Circulated Reports About Her.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Sept. 8.—Mrs. Lydia Chamberlain, wife of D. S. Chamberlain, the patent medicine man, to-day began suit for divorce. She alleges cruel and inhuman treatment in that he circulated reports that she was of unsound mind. The action has caused a sensation here, as both are leaders in society. They were married ten years ago.

Mrs. Chamberlain has been eccentric and attracted considerable attention by personally supervising the construction of the family mansion here. They have no children, and their home is seldom thrown open to the public, it being alleged that Mrs. Chamberlain feared some one would copy the design which she planned.

PORT ARTHUR NOW IS GIVING UP HOPE

Warships Cease Seriously to Oppose Foe's Vessels.

SOLDIERS ARE DESERTING

Garrison Apparently Short of Ammunition—Japanese Preparing for Another Attack.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 8.—Non-official news suggests that the garrison at Port Arthur is much disheartened.

The ships in the harbor have ceased seriously to oppose the Japanese reconnoitring vessels, which have thus been enabled to ascertain that the battleship Sevastopol is in a crippled condition, while others are more or less damaged.

The number of soldiers surrendering increases.

Several junks laden with provisions and ammunition from Che-Foo were captured by the blockading fleet on Sept. 2, also eight junks carrying 300 non-combatants from Port Arthur, who were sent to Dalny.

It is noticeable that the Russians have ceased mine-clearing operations, which hitherto have been carried on assiduously. The inference is that the Russians have abandoned hope that the remnant of the fleet can escape.

By The Associated Press.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 8.—Apparently well-informed Japanese who reached Che-Foo from Dalny to-day report that the Japanese Army before Port Arthur is preparing to make another assault on the fortress.

Japanese agents here are sending to Dalny 70,000 gunnysacks, and are endeavorig to secure 60,000 more. It is reported that these sacks are to be filled with sand and used to fill up portions of the moat protecting the Russian right flank.

The Chinese report that the Russians are buying unexploded shells manufactured for use during the Chinese-Japanese war. The persistency of this report during the past two weeks entitles it to considerable consideration, as indicating a shortage of large ammunition at Port Arthur.

Chinese who left Port Arthur on Monday arrived here to-day. They report that severe fighting occurred Sept. 3. The Japanese attacked certain positions on the east and west flanks, and the Russians allowed them to approach to within a short distance. Then they opened a heavy fire and compelled the Japanese to retreat after three hours' fighting.

An incident of the engagement was a clash between Japanese and Russian regiments of cavalry, resulting in the retreat of the former.

The Russian dry dock at Dalny has been repaired, and a Japanese torpedo-boat destroyer is now undergoing repairs there. The Japanese raised a vessel which had been sunk at the entrance of the dry dock by the Russians when they evacuated Dalny, and they recently discovered the gate of the dock, also sunk by the Russians. With this in their possession the dock was speedily made effective.

WEI-HAI-WEI, Sept. 8.—Firing at sea was heard here last night.

Vessels which went out from here to investigate the firing report that the flashes from the guns were plainly visible; they were unable, however, to ascertain whether the Japanese were firing upon Russian ships which had escaped from Port Arthur or upon junks. The activity of the Japanese in catching junks makes the latter supposition the more probable. Eighteen junks have been captured by the Japanese during the last few days.

A British ship was among those which investigated the firing. She reports that seven ships were engaged in the cannonade, and that they steamed away and disappeared upon the appearace of the British vessel.

JAPANESE SHELL KORSAKOVSK.

Cruisers Also Fire Torpedoes at the Sunken Warship Novik.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 8.—Two Japanese cruisers bombarded Korsakovsk, Island of Sakhalin, yesterday, and fired torpedoes at the sunken Russian cruiser Novik.

No attempt was made to land. Korsakovsk is defended by coast batteries.

Lieut. Gen. Liapounoff, Military Governor of Sakhalin, in a dispatch to the Emperor dated yesterday has transmitted the report of the commander of the garrison of Korsakovsk on the visit of Japanese vessels to that place on Tuesday, as follows:

"At 6 A. M. Tuesday, the smoke of steamers was observed at sea and the troops were prepared for action. Two Japanese transports of 6,000 tons each anchored eight versts out, and two launches were lowered and proceeded to the Novik. At 10:45 the order was given to fire volleys at the Japanese on board the Novik and in the launches.

"This firing was so successful that the deck of the Novik was cleared and the launches returned to the transports. The enemy returned the Russian fire, but no damage was done. At 12:45 P. M. the transports put to sea.

"The commander of the garrison went on board the Novik and found a number of rifles and some wire connected with mines. The wires were cut and nine mines, in different parts of the ship, were removed."

TOKIO, Sept. 8.—The officers commanding the Japanese expedition sent to examine the wreck of the Novik report that she is beached 900 yards southwest of Korsakovsk Lighthouse.

She has a thirty degree list to starboard, and with the exception of a small portion of her bow she is entirely submerged. Even on her upper deck the water is knee deep in the most shallow places. Her conning tower and upper works were heavily damaged by the Japanese shell fire. It is impossible to ascertain definitely the extent of the damage under water, but evidently it is considerable.

Russian land fire fired on the Japanese expedition while the examination was being made, but the expedition retired without sustaining any casualties.

COULDN'T DIE IN DEBT.

So Sick Woman Drew Savings—Then Thief Picked Her Pocket.

Mrs. Emma Williams, sixty years old, was informed by her physician yesterday that her days were numbered. She suffers from a chronic affection of the heart, and the doctor told her she was apt to drop dead at any minute.

Immediately on leaving his office she went to the bank in which her savings were deposited, and withdrew them, intending to settle her debts and make the last payment upon the burial plot she purchased some years ago in the Hoboken Cemetery.

"If I am to die," she told the bank teller, as he handed her over the $300 which was to her credit, "I want to be square with everybody when the time comes."

Mrs. Williams put the money in her pocket and started for home. When she reached her apartment the pocket was empty. The shock proved too much for her, and she fainted away. Her physician was called in, and declared that his warning of death was shortly to be verified. He said that there was hardly any hope for her, and that she could live but a few days.

Mrs. Williams is a widow. Since her husband died, eight years ago, she has supported herself, working night and day. Every cent above the barest living expenses she saved, and by her self-denial accumulated the sum the loss of which will hasten her end.

"It is too hard," she moaned last night, as she recovered consciousness. "I cannot bear to die with my debts unpaid. Even my grave is not paid for. I haven't another cent in the world, and am not able to work. What will I do, what will I do?"

POLICEMAN SHOT BY CHANCE.

Patrolman Frank L. Carey of the Madison Street Station was shot in the left breast over the heart through the accidental discharge of a revolver belonging to Patrolman William G. Dunn of the same precinct last night when the men were returning to the station house from supper for reserve duty. Six or eight policemen were sitting about the assembly room when the accident happened.

Carey was standing about seven feet from Dunn, and in front of him. When Dunn removed his coat his revolver was dragged from his pocket, and, falling to the floor, exploded. A bullet from the self-acting revolver struck Carey, who uttered an exclamation and dropped into a chair, but did not lose consciousness. Dunn was the first to rush to Carey's aid.

Dr. Hunt, who responded with an ambulance from Gouverneur Hospital, said the wound was serious, and hurried Carey to the hospital. Dunn was overcome with grief. Carey and he were chums, in a way, being together much when off duty. Capt. Shaw of the Madison Street Station said after investigation that the shooting was purely an accident.

WAS WRONG NEGRO LYNCHED?

Man Now in Jackson Jail Believed to be the Real Offender.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8.—Was it the real Starling Dunham who was lynched by burning at the stake at Eupora last June, for an attack on a white woman? This is the question that is worrying the city police.

There is a negro in the Jackson jail who says that his name was Starling Dunham, and officers here are convinced that the wrong negro was lynched at Eupora.

The negro was arrested for vagrancy and gave his name as Smith. His actions aroused the suspicions of the officers, and this afternoon they carefully examined the negro, and he tallied exactly with the description of Starling Dunham.

Then the negro became excited and said his real name was Dunham, that he was wanted in Webster County for assault, and did not want to go back unless he had the protection of a company of soldiers. The matter was laid before Gov. Vardaman, and if this proves to be the real Dunham he will receive protection if carried back.

LOST IN AN AVALANCHE.

American Prospector's Death in the Mountains of Colombia.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 8.—Advices have been received here stating that Robert Marshall, an American prospector, thirty-eight years old, of Chicago, had strayed away from his companions while locating mining properties on the Caribbean coast of the Republic of Colombia, and has been lost in an avalanche of snow 4,000 feet above the sea level.

Mr. Marshall has been missing since June 21 last and a new party of prospectors with additional supplies will leave here in a few days to search the mountains for his body.

There is so much snow that it will be months before the spot will clear sufficiently to reveal the body, but the new prospecting party will carry facilities for removing the brush.

CRAZED BY MANIAC'S BITE.

Woman, Formerly a Nurse, Violent, and Is Taken to Hospital.

Because of her peculiar actions, Annie Halpin, twenty-seven years old, of 604 East One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Street, was removed to the Harlem Hospital last night and will this morning be removed to Bellevue, where she will be placed in the psychopathic ward. The woman, who is a trained nurse, has acted strangely ever since she was bitten in the right arm by an insane patient in the Long Island State Hospital about three years ago.

Miss Halpin was afterward in the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island, and while at work one day cut her finger and blood poisoning set in. She gave up her place on Blackwell's Island, and as soon as she went home her queer actions began.

Recently she has imagined that every one was going to bite her, and last night became violent.

VERMONT PLURALITY, 31,556.

This Is Just 244 More Than It Was Four Years Ago.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Sept. 8.—The unofficial tabulation of the returns for Governor in Tuesday's State election was completed to-day with the receipt of the vote from the remote towns of Sherburne and Somerset, and the grand total places the plurality for Charles J. Bell, the Republican candidate, at 31,556.

The total vote for the two leading candidates is: Bell, (Rep.) [illegible]; Porter, (Dem.) 16,521. The Republican plurality four years ago was 31,312.

SULLIVAN CLAN'S OUTING.

"Big Tim" Lets His Followers Know He Prefers Albany to Washington.

Six thousand of the clan of Sullivan held their annual outing yesterday from the Sixth Assembly District to Donnelly's Grove, at College Point. All the Bowery and adjacent streets turned out to see the procession, which was led by Congressman "Big Tim" Sullivan, with Alderman "Little Tim" and Florence J., the leaders of the Sixth and Eighth Districts, respectively, as his chief escort.

The crowd gathered early at the Sullivan headquarters, the Metamora Club, at 207 Bowery. As early as 7 o'clock the disitribution of white caps and red, white, and blue canes was begun. Col. "Mike" Padden, Assemblyman "Charlie" Anderson, and Senator Fitzgerald aided the Sullivanites in looking after things, and in the parade line there were fully 500 bearing the name of Sullivan on their own account. In the line also were many delegations from other districts, with city officials and various district leaders. Fire Commissioner Hayes, leader in the Thirty-third District, had a big delegation in line. Thomas F. Foley also had a crowd of his Second District people in the parade.

SHEPARD FOR GOVERNOR.

Brooklyn Democratic Club Wants Ginger in the Campaign.

Indications that Edward M. Shepard is at least a receptive candidate for the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination were shown at last night's meeting of the Brooklyn Democratic Club, the old Shepard Democracy organization, at which resolutions were adopted providing for the appointment of a committee of the club to attend the Saratoga Convention on Sept. 20, where the committeemen will urge the naming of representative men on the State ticket.

The meeting was given over largely to the discussion of current campaign matters. The tenor of this discussion was to the effect that the campaign was running slowly, and that action and ginger should be injected. For this purpose the resolution was adopted. While it did not name Mr. Shepard in any way, he was suggested by several of the speakers who took part in the discussion.

Robert Dixon said that Mr. Shepard would make an ideal candidate and would add life and plenty of ginger. Jules Guedon asked Mr. Dixon whether he had any authority for his use of Mr. Shepard's name, but before Mr. Dixon could reply J. Warren Greene, a warm personal friend of Mr. Shepard, took the floor and declared that Mr. Shepard would be glad of any and all assistance the club could render him.

WIGWAM'S PARKER RALLY.

Murphy Plans Big Mass Meeting Before State Convention.

Tammany is arranging for a big Parker and Davis mass meeting to be held in the Wigwam next week, in advance of the Democratic State Convention.

Charles F. Murphy called at National Committee headquarters yesterday and talked with both Chairman Taggart and Executive Chairman Sheehan on the subject. Later he went to Tammany Hall and went over the matter with several of the district leaders who were awaiting him. It was explained at the hall that while the holding of a mass meeting in advance of the State Convention is unusual, the idea finds favor at this time, in order to start the National campaign going in full blast at an early date in Greater New York.

It became known at Tammany Hall yesterday that Judge Newburger of the Court of General Sessions is a candidate for Supreme Court Justice this year. This is the place which, it has generally been understood, has been promised to Senator Victor J. Dowling. There is nothing, however, to indicate there will be a contest in the County Convention which will be held at Tammany Hall on the night of Oct. 6 to make this nomination. Judge Newburger may be requested to wait another year, when there will be another vacancy. Ex-Assemblyman Joseph Green is understood to be in line for the City Court Judge nomination on the Democratic ticket this year, running against Judge Palmieri, who will be the Republican nominee.

BODIES OF GIRLS FOUND.

"Little Mothers" Hysterical When They Gather at the Morgue.

Seventy-five girls, members of the Little Mothers' Association at Second Avenue and Fourteenth Street, went to the Morgue last night, where the body of Katherine Collins, fourteen years old, of 408 East Twentieth Street, was taken after being recovered on Hunter's Point.

When the [illegible] mothers formed in line to view the body some of them fainted and others became hysterical. Physicians from Bellevue attended them.

The body of Katherine Collins was found early in the day before that of Jeannette Meehan, fifteen years old, of 427 East Twelfth Street, had been recovered at New Rochelle. Both girls were in a canoe at Hunter's Point on Sunday last, when the boat upset and they were drowned.

PARKER DENOUNCES REPUBLICAN RULE

Contrasts Its Extravagance with Cleveland's Economy.

NO POSTAL SCANDALS THEN

He Urges Democratic Editors to Cease Assailing Other Members of the Party.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, Esopus, Sept. 8.—In his second speech of this campaign, delivered to-day to the Democratic editors, Judge Parker attacked the Republican Party for the extravagance and corruption of its Administration, and contrasted it with the two Democratic Administrations of Grover Cleveland.

He gave figures to show the economy of the Democratic Administrations and the high cost of the Republican ones, invited a comparison of the honesty of the Cleveland period with the postal scandals of to-day, and suggested a comparison of the present campaign with the "turn-the-rascals-out" campaign of 1876, when Tilden ran for President.

He closed by warning the editors of the danger of attacking fellow-Democrats. He spoke of the Vermont election as an indication of the need for party harmony.

Judge Parker's speech was listened to with the closest attention by the editors, few of whom had ever heard him speak. Judge Parker read his speech with great care and deliberation, using few or no gestures.

The editors frequently applauded and several times broke into cheers and laughter at the speaker's attacks upon the Republican Administration.

The highest pitch of enthusiasm was reached toward the close when he deprecated attacks on others within the party. Cries of "Good; that's right" and the like broke from various parts of the audience, and for several moments the speaker had to wait for quiet.

Arrival of the Editors.

With the exception of Aug. 10, notification day, this was the biggest day yet for Rosemount. The arrival of the editors, their numbers swelled to more than 500 by friends and others desiring to be in on the doings of the day, tested the ability of the local Committee on Arrangements to the utmost.

Conditions were ideal for the reception of the visitors. The weather fates did their share nobly, and the generalissimo and lieutenants on the Parker estate did theirs equally well. The showpieces of the place, such as the one black sheep and the dog Teddy, were made ready for editorial scrutiny, and young Parker Hall stationed himself with a silk flag on the highest knoll.

As the steamboat St. John appeared on the southern horizon a few minutes after 11 o'clock the young representative of the candidate's family began a wild waving of the standard. The few gathered in front of the piazza waved anything that came handy and as the craft drew nearer the landing it was observed that the saluting fever had caught all hands on the boat.

The roustabouts went about their duties of tying up the boat, stern to the north, but not without getting the usual instructions from a lot of landlubbers who spoke of the cellar of the boat and the roof thereof and the "other" side of the deck.

The Seventh Regiment Band began "The Star Spangled Banner" as the party lined up two and three abreast for the march up the hill. It wound up the road and through the gate past the lodge toward where Judge Parker stood. He stepped onto the veranda from a window. To his left was a roped-in inclosure for members of the family and invited guests.

The editors and their allies ranged themselves all about, while Josephus Daniels, as Chairman, introduced Charles W. Knapp of The St. Louis Republic. The Missouri man said, among other things:

Charles W. Knapp's Speech.

"We are of one mind in echoing your own forcible denunciations of the trinity of oppressions from which the American people suffer so much. Not the transitory requirements of party duty, but the enduring responsibilities of a deep-seated conviction unite both you and us in unfaltering opposition to imperialism, high tariffs, and corrupt officialism.

"Recognizing these evils as alike in their essence, since they are simply varying forms of the same reckless sacrifice of the general public welfare in order that the private interests of the favored few may be the more effectively served, we congratulate the country that the promises of Democracy and the character of its nominee for the Presidency afford reasonable assurance by law and not according to individual caprice, assure regulation of our affairs through the wisdom of the Constitution and the virtuous people.

"We have been profoundly impressed with your earnest appeal that the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government preserve the clearly defined distinctions between their legislative powers, which the wise framers of our organic law imbedded in the Constitution of the United States.

"We draw from the record of your judicial career many evidences that none of these distinctions will be overlooked in your performance of administrative duties. We fear no belogging phrase of new inventions when you are our Executive, and do not doubt that you will promptly recognize that our so-called insular possessions are really subject colonies.

"We thank you particularly, Judge Parker, for the manly declaration that you will not be a candidate for a second term if you are elected President. We welcome in this avowal the introduction of a new and vital issue in politics and unhesitatingly give it our indorsement and support. It supplements and completes that glorious manifestation of your individuality which the telegram to the St. Louis Convention so forcibly conveyed.

"We rejoice that the principles and policies of Democracy have found so worthy an exponent in 1904, because we realize that every great popular movement must present to the people both the idea and the man for the hour. We give both, and we are proud of the man who so impressively demonstrates that he would rather be right than be President."

Judge Parker's Reply.

Judge Parker's speech in reply was as follows:

"It is indeed a great pleasure to welcome to Rosemount this body of representatives of the great American press, one of the mighty forces in the upbuilding and strengthening of a sturdy American citizenship. You have been in conference to the end that your work in this campaign may be as effective as possible. Organized effort and concerted action must always increase the effectiveness of the common endeavor of many hands.

"The leaders who are made a thoroughfare through history down which in all the centuries their fame will march with giant strides have all been men who, though in unconscious harsh expression of the hurried judgment of the people, were yet guided in all their public acts by the knowledge of what the deliberate and mature judgment of the people would be. So the great papers are those which anticipate the careful judgment of the majority.

"The great tribunal of the American people may be implicitly relied on to decide all questions with unerring and exact justice. The people may be often at fault, the ripe and final decision is always for the right. And the part of leadership is to know the right and to honestly, patriotically, fearlessly, and zealously advocate it.

"Just as long as the press can discern and lead the unhurried and well-considered judgment of the people, so long will its power grow mightily and so long will it hold its place in the front rank of the unfaltering and vigorous march of National progress. To the upbuilding of the power of the press and to the best use of that power you have devoted yourselves. There are questions of great import to be passed upon by the people in November, questions that it will be your duty, and therefore, I am sure, your pleasure as well, to present honestly and so clearly that the people will understand them.

"I shall not take up your time, however, with any reference to the great issues upon which our party, through its platform and candidates, confidently appeals to the people for indorsement, but crave your indulgence while I briefly refer to a single feature of the platform of the Republican Party.

Welcomes Republican Challenge.

"That platform opens with a declaration of that party's many years of control of government, coupled with the assertion that it has displayed a high capacity for rule and government, which has been made even more conspicuous by the incapacity and infirmity of purpose shown by its opponents.'

"This challenge to a comparison of Democratic and Republican Administrations since the Republican Party came into existence should be welcomed. Fortunately, we have eight recent years of Democratic Administration of the Executive Department of the Government which we will gladly compare with any similar period since 1860.

"The comparison will show that under Democratic control the administrative purity of the fathers was observed in the conduct of the Government; that no one of its departments was permeated, as of late, with corruption rivaling the days of the Star Route frauds; that a successful effort was made to check the growth of expenditures; that it resulted in each instance in cutting down the expenses within the control of the Executive Department of the Government below that of the preceding Administrations.

"The comparison will show also that each succeeding Republican Administration after 1868 increased expenses, and in some instances so greatly as to indicate reckless extravagance and waste of the people's money.

"During Mr. Cleveland's first term the average annual expenditure was about two hundred and sixty-nine millions. For the past three years it has been about five hundred and nineteen millions.

"The Governmental expenditure last year mounted up to five hundred and eighty-two millions, which is not equaled by any year since the civil war, with the exception of the year of the Spanish War.

A Deficit in Treasury Receipts.

"There is an inevitable result to such extravagance. Instead of a surplus in the annual receipts of about eighty millions, which the present Executive found on assuming control, there is now a deficit to be found there of forty-two millions.

"The limits of this address will not permit a further reference to the cost of administration, but it should receive careful examination at your hands.

"And you will be convinced that 'reform is necessary—aye, far more necessary than in 1876—in the scale of public expense, and when convinced you will do less than your duty if you fail to make the people understand it.

"The challenge of the Republican platform permits you to compare the details, the everyday life, so to speak, of the Democratic Administrations with both predecessive and successive Administrations, and you will not shrink from it.

"The sturdy honesty, marked ability, and thorough devotion to principle of all those in high places during those Democratic Administrations may without hesitation be placed alongside of the qualifications of similar officials in any and all other Administrations.

"Who, I pray you, would hesitate to compare the members of the Cabinet of those years with the present one, or with any one?

Cabinets of Roosevelt and Cleveland.

"Is the fame of Bayard, Manning, Fairchild, Endicott, Whitney, Vilas, Dickinson, Garland, members of the 1884 Cabinet, and Olney, Carlisle, Lamont, Smith, Francis, Herbert, Bissell, Wilson, and Harmon, of that of 1892, dwarfed when contrasted with the Cabinet officers of to-day?

"When the comparison is once completed you will be eager to ask the people which is the better.

"They will declare the victor in the contest between Administrations to be the one which, in addition to other excellencies, saved many millions a year to the Nation.

"Extravagance is running riot in Federal, State, and Municipal Governments, in spite of the well-directed effort of some excellent officials.

"The indebtedness of the Municipal Governments are steadily piling up, bond issues are increasingly frequent, and the people have not the satisfaction, in many instances, of a full equivalent in improvements for the money expended.

"And the Federal Government is leading in the race of great expenditures. Ere long the people will demand a reform in administrative expenses.

"And they will do it now if they are made to appreciate the whole truth.

Wants Attacks on Democrats Stopped.

"The Democratic Party is not a machine, it is a body of citizens who believe that on the whole its fundamental principles are best adapted to the conduct of the Government.

"Among so many patriotic and intelligent men it is inevitable that divergence of opinion as to minor questions and differences of view as to the best methods for the disposition of dead issues should be found. The party is concededly united to-day as to every vital article of faith which can reasonably enter into the pending canvass.

"Our adversaries are entrenched, in full possession of every department of the Government, and it is a mistaken policy that would drive away voters who would help to oust them.

"The cause cannot be advanced by attacks on others within the party with whom we have had disagreements, but who are now working with us for a common result.

"All men who have attained any degree of prominence have their friends, and the exercise of ordinary prudence forbids the alienation of allies who are willing and anxious to assist.

"The coming election is not to be determined by the September vote in hopelessly Republican States, where local issues and candidates even are grievously handicapped, but the result in Vermont on Tuesday admonishes us—and there can be no harm in giving voice to the admonition—that a harmonious cooperation of all and the elimination of personal, factional, and unimportant differences involving no surrender of principle, are essential to success."

No Secret Service Men Needed Here.

A reception, the most democratic and informal imaginable, began immediately the candidate's answer was concluded. The three or four Ulster County deputy sheriffs detailed for special duty quaked when they beheld the eager hundreds gathering around. Their duty was really to keep out of the way and allow all hands to do as they pleased, apparently. Anyway, they got out of Esopus early. Secret Service men were apparently no more needed here than out in the middle of the huge rock called Esopus Island.

The farm was inspected by straggling lines of editors and others. Then there was a general round-up for a photograph, for which Judge Parker and Mr. Knapp stood together on the north side of the house.

In twos, threes, and half dozens the visitors found their way down the terraces to the landing and over the boat sides to the dining cabins. With "Good Bye, Teddy" and a score of other selections the band enlivened a crowd that didn't need it.

Judge Parker, Representative William Sulzer, and Frederick Parker made their way with National Secretary Urey Woodson to the dock, and while the boat was backing up stream the candidate, flanked by Sulzer and the dog Teddy, lifted his broad straw hat scores of times. Three sets of cheers were fired off as the St. John floated out into the stream. The band struck up "The Soldier's Farewell," and followed it with a pot-pourri of melody, the echoes of which floated up the hill after the steamboat was lost in a cloud of smoke.

Mr. Sulzer marched right back again within hailing distance of Judge Parker. He and Henry C. Fordham of Mount Vernon, one of the Democratic leaders of Westchester County, took luncheon with the candidate's family and a few personal friends.

The majority of the editors held that the candidate should get out and show himself; that he should do something to "entice" the 6,000,000 and more Democrats throughout the country; that he should plan at once a speaking tour; that he should grasp the

ODELL MAY CHOOSE EX-JUDGE ANDREWS

Former Head of Court of Appeals Now Seventy-seven Years Old.

SECOND PLACE FOR ELSBERG

Governor-Chairman's Slate Complete Surprise to Most Politicians—Comment of Woodruff Men.

In the event that he should be unable to bring about the nomination of Lieut. Gov. Higgins for Governor, or if it should develop that for reasons not now apparent the nomination of Mr. Higgins would be inadvisable, Gov. Odell has the name of an up-State Judge to spring upon the Republican caucus at Saratoga. Such was the information which was obtained yesterday from sources close to the Governor. At the same time it was announced that the nomination for Lieutenant Governor had been offered to Senator Elsberg by the Governor-Chairman.

It was said by some of Gov. Odell's friends last night that his "dark horse" was ex-Chief Judge Andrews of Syracuse, but other advisers of the Governor declared that, while Judge Andrews's name had been under consideration during the week, it had been dropped because of the age of the Judge, who is in his seventy-eighth year.

The announcement that ex-Chief Judge Andrews was Gov. Odell's probable "dark horse" came as a complete surprise to most of the politicians. The name of Judge Andrews has never been mentioned in the printed list of available candidates up to this time. Judge Andrews was elected Chief Judge in 1880, and served until 1897, when he retired under the age limit.

It was said yesterday by the leaders who furnished the information of his candidacy that he did not look more than sixty-five, that he was hale and vigorous, and "had a voice that would fill Madison Square Garden." On account of the eminence which he attained in the Judiciary of the State and of his independent character it was said no one could claim with any force that he was a wearer of "the Odell tag" if he were nominated.

Despite his vigor, Gov. Odell and his advisers feared, it was said, that perhaps Judge Andrew's age would be urged against him as a fatal objection.

When some of the Woodruff men heard of the Andrews suggestion, they declared the bringing out of Andrews indicated that Gov. Odell had become apprehensive that Mr. Woodruff was likely to carry off the nomination in spite of him. They referred to the fact that Mr. Woodruff employs several thousand men in his typewriter factory in Syracuse, and said it was evident that if Gov. Odell and his friends were considering the nomination of Judge Andrews their purpose was to prevent the vote of Onondaga County going to Mr. Woodruff.

They stated that the sentiment of Onondaga County at the present time was favorable to the nomination of Mr. Woodruff and asserted that it would be dangerous to the leadership of Francis Hendricks if he were to undertake to deliver the vote of the county against Mr. Woodruff at the request of the Governor. With a Syracuse candidate for the Governorship in the field they admitted that Mr. Hendricks would have a good excuse for not supporting Mr. Woodruff, and, in their judgment, it was to give him that excuse that the candidacy of Judge Andrews was to be sprung.

Another development of the day in Republican circles was the reported reconciliation between ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff and George R. Sheldon. Mr. Woodruff was dining with a party of friends in an up-town restaurant when Mr. Sheldon happened in, and walking over to where Mr. Woodruff sat, greeted him cordially, and announced:

"Tim, I am going to the State Convention as a delegate from the Twenty-fifth District for the sole purpose of doing all that I can to bring about your nomination for Governor."

It was because of the agitation raised by Lieut. Gov. Woodruff and his friends over Mr. Sheldon's trust record that Mr. Sheldon lost the nomination for Lieutenant Governor two years ago. Mr. Sheldon was very bitter against Mr. Woodruff at the time. Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Sheldon had been college mates, and there was a friendship between them of thirty-five years' standing. In view of their lifelong intimacy, Mr. Sheldon considered Woodruff's opposition to his candidacy unpardonable. He publicly announced that he would never forgive him. Senator Platt said the same thing. Now Woodruff is Platt's candidate for Governor. In making up with Woodruff, therefore, Sheldon was but following the example of Platt.

The general view taken of the Sheldon-Woodruff reconciliation was that the animating motive with Sheldon was to get even with Gov. Odell, if possible, for the manner in which the Governor acted toward him in connection with the Shipbuilding Trust bonds, which the Governor purchased and on which he is now trying to get his money back by legal proceedings.

Notwithstanding the fact that Senator Platt has been conferring with Gov. Odell with respect to the make-up of the State ticket, evidence accumulates that whatever may be the personal relations between the Governor and the Senator, the old feeling of bitterness of the followers of each still exists. The reported tender of the nomination for Lieutenant Governor to Senator Elsberg brought forth some vigorous expressions of resentment from Platt leaders yesterday.

Senator Elsberg was one of the trio of Senators who refused to go into the Republican caucus when the nomination of a United States Senator to succeed Senator Platt was under consideration in January, 1903. The caucus declared for the re-election of Senator Platt by a practically unanimous vote.

When Senator was voted for in the Senate, Senator Elsberg, with his insurgent colleagues, Senators Brackett and Brown, voted for Elihu Root. Brackett and Brown made the bitterest attack on Senator Platt. Elsberg did not make any personal attack on Senator Platt, but he did say, in effect, that obedience to Platt's leadership meant an abdication of conscience and judgment by subordinate leaders.

"If Elsberg should be the candidate for Lieutenant Governor," said a prominent Platt man last night, "Senator Platt's friends up State, who resent this manner in which he was deposed as State leader, would certainly cut him. If Elsberg could afford to stay out of a Republican caucus and vote against the caucus candidate, Platt's friends would with equal propriety refuse to cast their votes for him for Lieutenant Governor."

PANAMAN BLEW OUT GAS.

Was Learning Produce Export Business in Office of Local Firm.

Nicola Alvarado, twenty-three years old, son of Rafael Alvarado, a successful produce merchant of Panama, who only reached this city on Wednesday on the steamship Alliança, was found dead in bed with the gas turned on and unlighted in Room 103 on the fifth floor of the Union Square Hotel yesterday morning. He is believed to have blown out the light through ignorance of the habits of illuminating gas, and the posture of the body indicated that he died in peaceful sleep.

Alvarado came to spend a year in studying English under the guardianship of Louis P. Nebolt of Isaac Brandon & Brothers, export commission merchants at 17 Battery Place. He intended to take up his father's business and was engaged to TAMMANY ELECTS DELEGATES.

None but the Murphy "Old Guard" Chosen in Most Districts.

Tammany Assembly District Conventions last night passed off without a hitch in any of the thirty-five Assembly Districts in Manhattan and the Bronx. In each three delegates and three alternates were elected to attend the Democratic State Convention to be held at Saratoga Springs on Sept. 20.

It was a noticeable fact that none but the Murphy "Old Guard" were named on the delegations, which in almost every instance were headed by the leaders of the respective districts. There was no attempt made to get any big Democrats in the various delegations, but only Tammany men upon whom Charles F. Murphy could count without question in any crisis that might arise. Mr. Murphy himself heads his delegation from his own Eighteenth District, with Charles V. Fornes and Frank A. O'Donel as associates. There was no convention held in the Annexed District, where the Tammany leader, Thomas H. O'Neil, said the convention call would not be issued until Monday next. The delegates and alternates elected in the other districts follow:

FIRST DISTRICT—Delegates, Daniel E. Finn, Alexander J. Doyle, William H. Russell. Alternates, Timothy J. Gowan, William G. Kennedy, John G. Snyder.

SECOND DISTRICT—Delegates, Asa Bird Gardiner, Arthur Brisbane, John Hoyer. Alternates, Daniel Valenti, Alfred E. Smith, Michael Stapleton.

HENRY GEORGE FOR PARKER.

Coming out for the election of Judge Parker to the Presidency and urging the nomination of Edward M. Shepard for Governor as a means to strengthen the Democratic Party in the State, Henry George, Jr., has written a letter to John De Witt Warner, which was made public yesterday. The letter was dated at Merriewold Park, Sullivan County, and is, in part, as follows:

"It appears to me of utmost general and party importance that Edward M. Shepard should be nominated for the Governorship by the Democratic Convention at Saratoga on the 20th inst.

"His strong moral qualities, high, clear principles, splendid attainments, and long training in public and legal affairs fit him peculiarly to fill with profit and honor to the State of New York and with distinction to himself the office which for years has been degraded to the lowest standards.

"To men thinking as I do there is not only no good result to be obtained by voting for Mr. Watson, the People's Party candidate for the Presidency, but it is a negative evil. While, despite his opposing action, he is a good Jeffersonian Democrat, and while there is much progressive democracy in his platform, he has little chance even of making a good showing at the polls, not to speak of being elected. The election lies between President Roosevelt and Judge Parker, and what one or the other stands for must govern the administrative branch of the United States Government for the next four years. In my judgment, the election of Judge Parker is needed to save the Republic from imminent danger."

Suffolk Delegates Favor Woodruff.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Sept. 8.—The Republicans of the Second Assembly District of Suffolk County held their convention today and selected delegates to the State Convention. They are William F. Carr, B. F. Harris, Charles H. Howell, Scudder Smith, E. S. Post, J. J. Bartlett, and Samuel L. Parish. The delegates were not instructed, but individually each of the delegates favors Timothy L. Woodruff for Governor.

TWO REPUBLICAN ROWS OVER STATE DELEGATES

DOUGLAS MEN QUIT THE HALL.

Hess-Birrell-Parsons Quarrel in the Twenty-fifth Also Sent to Convention.

Rows occurred in two of the Republican Assembly District Conventions held last night to elect delegates and alternates to the State Convention which is to meet in Saratoga on Sept. 14.

These were in the Nineteenth and the Twenty-fifth Assembly Districts, where contesting delegations were named, thus carrying the Douglas-Gilman-Quigg fight and the Conkling-Hess-Birrell-Parsons fight into the State Convention. In each of the other districts harmony existed.

The regular convention in the Nineteenth District was held in the Miller Building, at Broadway and Sixty-fifth Street, and was called to order by Lemuel E. Quigg, who read the roll for the convention as issued by Chairman Murray of the County Committee.

Theodore P. Gilman, the leader of the district, and who won out at the recent primaries, placed Robert Maxet in nomination for temporary Chairman, while the name of L. Barton Case was presented by Albert H. Harris, a supporter of Congressman Douglas.

On the roll call ninety votes were cast, Maxet getting fifty-five to thirty-five cast for Case. Under the recent ruling by Supreme Court Justice Clarke, who declared Douglas elected leader after the primary vote had been recanvassed, Douglas should have had a majority of three in the convention. It was contended by the Douglas men that fifteen of the Douglas voters were absent from the convention, which gave the opposition a majority.

In order that these vacancies should be filled, Gilman moved that they be filled by a vote of the convention. This was opposed vigorously by Mr. Harris for Congressman Douglas, who offered an amendment that the vacancies be filled by the election district Captains. Chairman Quigg declared this motion out of order, and Mr. Harris protested. There was an uproar, but when a roll call could be secured Mr. Harris was defeated.

The Douglas delegates then arose angrily from their seats and quit the hall, going to an understanding establishment at Broadway and Seventy-sixth Street, where they held a rump convention. The Gilman contingent named Theodore P. Gilman, Lemuel Ely Quigg, John J. Hahn, Charles O. Mass, Gilchrist Stewart, Charles F. Bostwick, Charles F. Bruder, Howland S. Duell, and Frank H. Platt, a son of Senator Thomas C. Platt, as State Convention delegates.

At the Douglas convention, over which Mr. Case presided, William H. Douglas was named to head the contesting delegation, with John S. Wise, H. W. Mack, W. P. Rooms, L. Barton Case, S. W. Patterson, G. C. Bachelior, L. B. Stanton, and Frederick Spellberg as associates.

The Twenty-fifth District Convention was held in the rooms of the Madison Square Republican Club at 1,140 Broadway. During the evening an attempt was made by the Conkling-Hess-Birrell faction, which had been defeated at the primaries, to capture the convention, and when this attempt failed the members of the faction, led by Howard Conkling, adjourned to the Hamilton Clubrooms, at 24 West Twenty-sixth Street, and held a convention of their own, at which a full set of delegates and alternates was named.

The contest began when the convention decided upon the substitution of Marvin Scudder in the place of Charles L. Burney, who was Chairman. Wadhams, in making the substitution, did so under the new rule of the Republican County Committee, passed this year, under which such substitution must be made by the convention and not by the delegates from the district, as in the past. The Conkling men named Charles A. Hess for the vacancy, and were surprised when the new rule was sprung on them Scudder was named over Hess by a vote of 35 to 31. On two other substitutions the name of Hess was presented, and then the disaffected ones left the hall.

The convention in the Twenty-seventh District was the only one to pass instructions, the delegates being ordered to vote for Henry W. Taft for Governor. The delegates and alternates elected in all the districts are:

FIRST DISTRICT.—Delegates—Edwin F. Merwin and Antonio Dalessandro. Alternates—Christian Rathjen and George Stroh.

A Unique Showing of PARIS WRAPS

There are Paris wraps in New York, to be sure; but they came over earlier. And after they had been started on their way, to show the latest styles in things Parisian, fickle Fashion made a complete volte face, and declared for large sleeves!

Our fashion advices from Paris closed on August 17th—after the departure of all other model wraps; and they show, in superb completeness, the latest cry in fashions for Fall.

Our models show some of the many methods of treating the sleeves. There are dozens of variations, but all are large and full. A decided novelty consists of the new broadtail velvet. We show some strikingly handsome specimens of its application.

Raincoats of Cravenette; full length; double-breasted, full back, belted; new full sleeves, with darted shoulders; and plaited into deep cuffs of cloth; stitched flaring collar. $33.

Seven-eighths length Coat of black satin, covered with black spangled net; shirred ribbon trimming; white satin collar and cuffs; cape effect on shoulder; garment lined with satin. $200.

Rotunda.

Feather Boas and Muffs The Fall showing is ready. One might call these fluffy, graceful confections of feathers "Autumn furs"—for they serve that purpose until nipping winds make real furs a necessity. And some of the marabout stoles, in a rich seal brown, look almost like fur, a short distance away.

We have never shown such a rich variety, nor one so moderately priced. We are but giving you the advantage of our very favorable purchases abroad—boas that are priced at $5, $10, $15, would have brought nearly as much again last season.

Prices begin at $2, for long, full Coq-feather Boas—1½ yards long, in pink, white, gray and blue. The same, 2 yards long, are $3—a most unusually low figure. The rich, iridescent green Coq-feather Boas are $10; Stoles are $15, and Muffs to match are $10.

Flat Stoles are the latest fashion; made of curled coq feathers and ostrich plumes, they are $22. Five-strand Stoles of ostrich and marabout, are $14 and $20; Stoles of marabout alone, in brown or black, with three to five strands, are $8 to $16.

But these are mere indications; you must see them all to form an idea of the breadth of the collection. Second floor, Tenth street.

Mercerized Cotton Waistings
At 50¢, Instead of 85¢ and $1

This collection of 10,000 yards of these beautiful Autumn waist fabrics, includes forty patterns in colored effects and twenty-five patterns in pure white. These heavy cotton goods are almost as warm as flannel, and women seem to prefer their smart effectiveness to the softer woolen goods, at least during the earlier months of Autumn.

The colored waistings are shown on the Tenth Street side near the Rotunda. They are in matelasse mixed grounds of colors with black, and in white with embroidered polka-dots in black and colors. Also in plaid effects and other attractive designs. The pure white waistings are in matelasse weaves, showing various size checks, plaids, figures, and moire effects.

The White Waistings are shown on counters on the Broadway side. Goods that sell regularly for 85c and $1 a yard, in lustrous mercerized finish, now at 50c.

A Distinguished Showing of Trimmed Hats The trend of the season's styles in Millinery is faithfully reflected in this showing of Trimmed Hats, with the distinctiveness that comes from their having originated in our own workrooms.

The display ranges from an exceptional group of Mourning Hats, to elaborate models for afternoon and evening dress wear. There are stunning picture hats and Gainsboroughs, moderate turban shapes, Directoire hats and sailor shapes, in a fine assortment of materials and colorings. Ribbon, chenille and uncut velvet are some of the former, while rich blues and browns, in a profusion of shades, are among the latter.

Women of taste will enjoy the display.

Second floor, Broadway and Tenth street.

Lillian Corsets At $6 A model that combines least weight with most strength. It is admirably adapted for either out-door sports or full-dress occasions; and gives perfect freedom to both hips and bust.

Made in Paris, of fine French coutil, in white only. An exquisite model, at an attractive price—$6.

Second floor, Tenth street.

Black Silk PETTICOATS, $5, Worth $6.75 Handsomely made Petticoats, of a rich grade of black taffeta silk; and priced at nearly two-fifths below their usual market value—an attractive offering, that.

Made with graduated accordion plaited flounce, finished with gathered ruffle and full ruche; silk foundation, and dust ruffle—

$5 Each. Worth $6.75

Tenth street, Second floor.

A Simple Help For Many Ills The Health Vibrator, which is being demonstrated every day this week in our Basement, is a thing that should be in every home.

One prominent Philadelphia physician bought two in our Philadelphia Store for his own use, and sent ten of his patients for them because he recognized the fact that the vibratory massage, which this simple little instrument produces at home, was very much better than any medicine he could prescribe, in a great many cases.

If you have headache, rheumatism or some other trouble caused by congestion, the demonstrator will be glad to give you a treatment without charge. Price of Vibrator, $5.

For Amateur Photographers Hundreds of people whose friends are coming home from their vacations with albums full of pictures, are sorry they were not similarly equipped themselves. Now is a good time to start, and you will be able to operate the camera before your next trip comes along.

We have Brownie Cameras at $1 and $2. The Folding Brownie Cameras at $5. The regular Eastman Kodaks, from $5 to $35. Full lines of the Premo and other cameras.

We have all supplies that are required by the amateur who does his own work from beginning to end. If you wish simply to snap your pictures, we will do the developing and printing for you in excellent manner. Our facilities for this work have been recently very much improved. We do developing in one day's time, providing the film or plate is received before one o'clock. Developing and printing require two days for Velox, and a little longer for Solio. Basement.

Oriental Jeweled LANTERNS This is a collection of about 150 Lamps for halls, dens and cozy corners. They are in square, round, oblong and fancy shapes, of Japanese bronze, dead black and gold. Studded with 28 to 65 colored cut jewels. Each lamp complete with brass oil font, burner and chimney. Regular prices were $6.50, $7.50 and $9, but we are offering them today at $3.50.

GRANT'S LINE AT BULL RUN REMAINS UNBROKEN

Gen. Bell's Brilliant Advance Was Unavailing.

BLUE GENERAL WANTED TRUCE

Men Were Tired and He Wanted Battle Postponed, but Brown Commander Wouldn't Agree.

Special to The New York Times.

GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 8.—In the first campaign of the third battle of Bull Run, which ended yesterday with the piercing of the Brown Army's line in front of Thoroughfare Gap, imaginary bullets killed and wounded more than 1,800 men of the 27,000 troops engaged in the tactical contest. Today the men constructively put out of action by the umpires, who, according to one of the foreign military attachés, are more deadly than bullets, were on the field of battle early, fresh and strong for the work of the second and final campaign of the Manassas battle of theories.

The day's action resulted in nothing more decisive than the establishing of lines for the final contest to-morrow, which will end the manoeuvres in the field. The Brown army, which in the first problem was on the defensive, took the offensive to-day, and with the dash and vigor which distinguished the Brown commander's movements, Gen. Bell advanced his troops from his Thoroughfare base, about eight miles, in the direction of the Blue camp at Manassas.

The brilliancy of the Brown advance, however, was considerably discounted by the firm stand made by the Blues. In spite of the strong concerted attack made by the Browns on the Blue centre, Gen. Grant's army stood its ground, and when the technical nightfall came his line was unbroken and strongly protected.

There was only one casualty to-day, and that did not occur on the field of battle. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, whose husband is with the Twelfth New York and who herself is at Gen. Corbin's headquarters as the guest of the commanding General's wife, was the victim.

Mrs. Vanderbilt arrived yesterday, but the four trunks with which she started out had not arrived this morning. She made inquiries at the railroad station near corps headquarters. Finally she discovered that the trunks had gone to Gainesville, Ga., instead of the Virginia town of that name, several hundred miles out of the way.

So successful was Gen. Bell's stratagem to tire out his Blue enemies yesterday by withdrawing his line in such a manner that they were obliged to march back twelve miles from Thoroughfare to Manassas under a hot sun and in clouds of yellow Virginia dust, that Gen. Grant tried to have to-day's contest called off. He wanted the beginning of the second problem postponed twenty-four hours in order that his men, who were badly used up, might have time to recuperate.

Gen. Bell declined to agree to the proposition, and he told the aide of the Blue commander who made the request that he didn't want to spoil the arrangements in the making of which he had exercised great care and considerable time. The hour originally set for the beginning of to-day's fighting was 6 o'clock, and Gen. Bell finally compromised and agreed to postpone the start of the new campaign until 9 o'clock, at which hour hostilities began this morning.

Gen. Grant endeavored to have the hour made 10 o'clock, but the Brown commander would not grant his rival more than three hours extra rest.

Gen. Wint, commanding the First Brigade of the Blue defense, brought two batteries of artillery, twelve guns, to the top of Douglas Heights, a commanding elevation near Groveton, which covers to the north the old railroad cut of the line which never has been completed and which was held by Jackson against Sigel.

The Blue operation to-day was described by Col. Wagner the chief umpire, as generally successful. It was a rear guard engagement.

Gen. Grant's idea was to withdraw before the attacking Brown to a position of strength and to delay the advance of the enemy with his rear guard until the arrival of imaginary reinforcements. He was successful in that his army retired as directed, but not all his brigades had taken up the final position assigned to them across Bull Run when the theoretical sunset behind the mountains at 3 o'clock.

Gen. Bell's attack was directed against the Blue left, and Gen. Lee on the Brown right, Col. Smith on Gen. Lee's right, Gen. Barry in the centre, and Col. Regan at the extreme right, were directed to proceed and engage the enemy where discovered. Gen. Bell, on account of Grant's retreat and the interference of Gen. Wint's brigade, failed to uncover the Blue line.

The Second Maine, in Gen. Lee's Brown brigade, came nearest to this strong position, advancing to the railroad cut which Stonewall Jackson made famous. In so doing, however, the Maine boys did not notice that several companies of the Fifth Massachusetts were in a clump of woods they passed, and, for this reason the umpires awarded the scalps of a whole battalion of the Maine regiment.

Early in the morning a squadron of Blue cavalry under Major Bridgeman of New York's Squadron A, with a battalion of Blue infantry, attacked a squadron of the Browns's Seventh Regular Cavalry at Swartz's, on the Warrenton Turnpike, and the result was that the Brown cavalry was ruled out of action. Major Bridgeman's forces theoretically lost only two men. His cavalry strength was made up of one troop of Squadron A men, a troop of the Fifteenth regulars, and a troop of Connecticut horse.

After making this capture, Major Bridgeman was ordered to patrol all roads from Swartzs to Wellington. The Seventh Cavalry of the Browns resumed its raiding operations to-day, and although Major Bridgeman beat out one squadron of it in an encounter, two other squadrons flanked the Seventy-fourth New York militia of Gen. Wint's Blue Brigade, who were being engaged by the First North Carolinas of Gen. Lee's Brown Brigade, and captured a whole battalion of it. The umpires have given no official decision to that effect, but the regulars have put the disturbance was as real as theoretical capture could be.

Another misfortune to New York's Seventy-fourth occurred earlier in the morning. A private on outpost duty was up in an apple tree, with eagle eyes peering out for the approach of a Brown enemy. Relaxing his vigilance for a moment he reached out for a big apple when the branch broke and the scout tumbled to the ground. He broke his ankle.

The Fifth New Jersey, acting in the First Brigade of the Blues, made a well-concealed advance by forced marches against the Brown line, which was held along the Manassas road by the Second New York Infantry. Two Jersey companies got up so close to them, and their imaginations had been so stirred by their days of imaginary warfare that they thought they had licked the New Yorkers actually.

The two lines bumped together, and both sides, hurling defiance at each other, started in with their fists. Just then some umpires arrived and ordered both sides to withdraw.

Considerable praise was won by the New Jersey boys, however, for their two companies, A and L, had outflanked an entire battalion of the New Yorkers. After the Brown General had established his line the First Brigade, under Gen. Barry, withdrew from the front, and when hostilities were suspended at 3 o'clock marched back along the Warrenton and Thoroughfare pikes to a favorable location about one and one-half miles up the Catharpin road, where they will bivouac to-night, returning to their original position when hostilities are resumed.

One of the regiments in Gen. Barry's brigade of Browns is the Twelfth of New York, and they seemed pretty well fagged after their fifteen-mile roundabout march from Buckland, although they were not in action during the day. At the head of one of the columns was Lieut. Cornelius Vanderbilt marching along, and in such fine fettle that besides his own accoutrements he was carrying the gun of a member of his company who could scarcely drag his feet along.

BOAT RAMS ABUTMENT.

The Speedway, Fastest of Motor Craft, Wrecked.

Designed to be among the fastest of her class, the motor boat Speedway dashed headlong to destruction while on her trial trip on the Harlem River, where she was built, at 5:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when, like a shying horse she bounded aside from her course and plunged into the stone abutment of the railroad bridge of the Putnam Division of the New York Central at One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street.

Charles L. Seabury, her builder, and an assistant, the only persons aboard, were flung far from the wreck and fell into the water stunned, bruised, and bleeding from the flying splinters, while the costly launch, shattered for half her length, lay wedged against the pier a shapeless wreck of such little worth that it was abandoned where it lay after the broken and bent machinery had been removed.

The crash was heard for a long distance along both banks of the stream and brought many running to the best points of view. Mr. Seabury and his assistant, helplessly drifting on the current, were in danger of drowning; but a passing railroad tug made for them as John Schultz, an oarsman, who had just returned from a practice row, and "Charley," the boathouse janitor, standing together on the float of the Harlem Rowing Club, hardly half a block away, launched a boat and started for the rescue.

Muscle beat steam that time, and the two men in the water were hauled into the row boat, as the tug came up. Among those who cheered the rescue were scores of persons from the Polo Grounds, a short distance away, who were attracted by the sound of the collision.

Mr. Seabury and his comrade were put ashore and went away after thanking their rescuers, avoiding the questions of the curious crowd. Mr. Seabury remarked, thought, that he believed the accident was due to some failure in the boat's steering gear, although there was hardly enough left of it to tell certainly. He said he would go at once to his home in Yonkers.

The boat Speedway was built at the works of the Motor Power Boat and Construction Company, of which Mr. Seabury is the head, at Morris Heights, being close beside the United States gunboats Dubuque and Paducah, one of which is yet on the stocks, and one or two snaky-looking smaller steam vessels which have recently left their builders' hands, some say to fight ultimately for Japan or Russia.

The Speedway was roughly valued at $10,000. She was about 35 feet long, and common report along the river was that she was meant to beat Louis Nixon's redoubtable motor boat Standard. Should she do all that was expected of her, it was said, she would have been the property of Commodore Frederick G. Bourne of the New York Yacht Club.

She kissed the water for the first time yesterday and soon was the focus of all eyes as she sped with ever-increasing speed to and fro over the oft-measured courses of the Harlem, and causing, at the same time, no little consternation among the occupants of the lighter shells and wherries by the sharp, thin waves which she threw out on either side as she swept along.

She was passing down the river toward Harlem Bridge when she was wrecked, and but a moment before an expert who had been watching her progress from the bank, watch in hand, ventured the opinion to a friend that she was traveling nearly, if not quite, twenty-four miles an hour.

STARVING HERSELF FOR GRIEF.

Woman Whose Husband Car Killed Barricades House and Refuses Food.

Since the death of her husband on Tuesday as the result of a trolley accident, Mrs. Elizabeth Calder has confined herself to her apartments at 252 Manhattan Avenue, Williamsburg, and it is the belief of both the police of the Stagg Street Station and the woman's neighbors that she is slowly starving herself to death. Efforts have been made by both the police and neighbors to gain access to her apartments, which are on the ground floor, but without avail. The police have referred the matter to the Charities Department, whose officers will make every effort to remove the woman to an institution.

Charles Calder, the husband of the woman, a carpenter, met his death by falling under a car at Graham Avenue and Powers Street. When Mrs. Calder was notified of her husband's death, she seemed to lose her reason and at once barricaded herself in her apartments and has refused to admit any one, not even her stepson, Mrs. Calder does not believe that her husband is dead, but declares to her neighbors from behind barricaded doors that he has deserted her. Calder's body is at an undertaking establishment and will be buried to-day in the Evergreen Cemetery. Calder was sixty-seven years old, and his wife, forty-five.

HORSE TRAMPLES POLICEMAN.

Lanahan Tried to Get Animal from in Front of Fire Engines.

While Engine Companies 33 and 20 were going to a fire in the packing box factory of A. Smoke at 161 Wooster Street last night, a stray horse got in the way at Elm and Houston Streets. Engine 33 was going down Elm toward Houston and Engine 20 was going up Elm toward Houston, both at a pretty good clip.

As the whistling engines approached the horse became confused and stood still in the centre of the cross streets. Patrolman Lanahan of the Mulberry Street Station grabbed at a loose strap hanging from the horse's collar. He attempted to pull the horse to one side, but the animal reared, threw Lanahan, and trampled upon him. The horse then skipped down Elm Street and the engines swung into Houston Street. Lanahan was dragged from beneath the wheels of Engine 33 by several citizens just in the nick of time.

Lanahan was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. He had sprained the ligaments of the right shoulder and both legs were badly bruised.

GOING OVER FALLS, HE WROTE.

Alleged Letter from Lovelace Expressing Suicidal Intentions.

The Brooklyn police have requested the police of Buffalo and Niagara Falls to look out for a man named Robert Lovelace who, they thought, might try to go over the falls. George Anderson of 724 Carroll Street, a steamship officer employed by the Ward Line, reported to the police that he had received a letter, apparently coming from Lovelace, indicating that he intended to commit suicide. The letter was as follows:

"I left on the Lackawanna Road at 6 o'clock to-night, and will arrive at Buffalo at 7 o'clock. I will take car to arrive at the falls at 9 A. M. I will go over the Horseshoe at 9:30 o'clock. I cannot stand it any longer. I have heard from there to-day. This is a coward's course, I know, but cannot suffer any longer."

Lovelace is employed as an oiler on one of the Ward Line steamers. His family, it is said, live in Buffalo.

ALLEGED SWINDLER IS HELD.

Complainants Say Buttell Took Money, but Didn't Get Them Jobs.

With two complaints of swindling against him, and a third promised by the police, John J. Buttell, thirty-two years old, calling himself a "business broker," with an office in the Hamilton Building, and residence at 11 East One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street, was held for trial in the Harlem Court yesterday in $1,500 bail.

The complainants were Henry Ataff of 6 East One Hundred and Fifteenth Street and Louis Meiselman of 105 Clinton Street, who allege that Buttell swindled them out and $100 and $150, respectively, by requiring them to deposit the amounts with him on his agreement to secure them regular employment. They say he failed to get the jobs or to return the money.

New World's Pacing Records.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 8—Two world's records were broken at the New York State Fair race meet this afternoon. Miss Phelps of Troy drove the roan gelding Albert, 2:04¼, a mile in 2:05½, establishing new figures for a pacer with a woman driver.

The yearling colt Paul D. Kelly, owned by U. G. Smith of Glens Falls, paced a mile in 2:20¾, equaling the fastest time ever made by a yearling pacer and beating the world's record of 2:22, which has stood since 1893. The fractional time was 0:34½, 1:09, 1:45, 2:20¾.

MAY BE HITCH OVER SUBWAY PEACE PLAN

Report That Amalgamated Body Opposes Three-Year Contract.

POSSIBLE EIGHT HOUR MOVE

President Mahon Said to Desire General Reorganization of Interborough Employes After Tunnel Opening.

The three-year contract between the Interborough Company and its employes, members of the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers and of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes of America, was not signed yesterday.

Two explanations were made of the failure to carry out the programme laid out for the meeting of the Interborough officials and union officials. One, by Vice President Bryan of the company, which received the silent assent of the other conferrees, was that the postponement was due to a desire of the men to read over the terms of the contract, and that the signing would be done to-day. The other, contained in an apparently well-founded report which went the rounds of the unions last night, had it that President Mahon of the Amalgamated Association had declared himself in yesterday's meeting to be utterly opposed to a three-year contract of any kind.

Mr. Mahon, in his capacity of President of the Amalgamated Association, represents some 3,700 employes of the elevated system, the organization comprising all men employed there with the exception of those belonging to the Brotherhoods of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen.

In explanation of Mr. Mahon's objection to the three-year agreement, it was said that, after the subway service had been started, the President of the amalgamated contemplated a complete organization of the subway men with a view of demanding an eight-hour working day. In this move, it is understood, Mr. Mahon is counting upon the support of the brotherhood men, in return for the aid they have given them in enforcing their present demands on the Interborough for a $3.50 rate for motormen in the subway. It was pointed out that the men of the amalgamated had lent their support in the present crisis without the prospect of any benefits to themselves.

Color is lent to this rumor from the fact that at yesterday's conference President Mahon, George E. Pepper of the local branch of the Amalgamated, and the other representatives of that organization left the conference in a body about half an hour before it adjourned. Neither Mr. Mahon nor his associates were willing to make any statement. Mr. Mahon left for New Haven during the evening.

Should these rumors prove true it would undoubtedly cause a serious hitch in the negotiations and perhaps considerable delay in arriving at a amicable understanding between the company and its men.

Mr. Bryan and the labor leaders met in the Interborough office at 195 Broadway. All the National and local heads of unions involved were on hand, with the exception of Grand Chief Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Mr. Stone was summoned West on urgent business, and left Assistant Grand Chief J. J. Hurley to take care of the interests of their organization.

Before the conference began Mr. Bryan thought that fifteen minutes at the outside would be more than ample time in which to reach the final conclusion, as the contract had been drawn up in advance. After the meeting got under way, however, according to reports of the participants, the labor representatives insisted that the contract be gone over clause by clause. They found fault with the phraseology in a number of instances, and in many cases demanded changes in provisions, the wording which the officials of the company thought had been finally agreed upon at the protracted conference of the day before. The company's attitude in insisting on the "standard" railway test in the case of applicants for positions in the subway gave rise to considerable discussion. This is about the only point in the entire controversy on which the company refused to yield. A determined effort was made by the labor leaders to prevail upon the Interborough officials to reconsider the agreement reached on this point the day before, and surrender on that point as well, but it was without avail.

Strike Breaker Farley yesterday paid off his entire strike-breaking force and prepared to withdraw from the office he has occupied in the Western Union Building. A small force of men who had been employed by the company direct while the strike threatened, and who since then have been at work in the subway, were also told yesterday that their services would not be required for the present. There was considerable grumbling among these men, some of whom declared that they had left other positions to go to work for the Interborough.

SAYS FATHER WAS SWINDLED.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Sept. 8.—E. D. Middlekauff, of Watchung Avenue, Plainfield, was arrested there yesterday by Detective McCarthy of the Plainfield Police Force, on a warrant sworn out by Mrs. Ellen Van Evra Opdyke of Vineland, who charges that Middlekauff defrauded her father, who died three months ago, out of $11,882.

Mrs. Opdyke's story is that by false representation the prisoner caused her father to purchase 100,000 shares of National Oil and Devolpment Company stock and other stocks of alleged worthless quality. Middlekauff, it is claimed, was to put up $5,000, and, it is claimed, did not. The stock did not rise and Mr. Van Evra, it is said, died from worrying over his bad investments. Chief of Police Bullock brought Middlekauff here and he was held under bond for a hearing on Sept. 16.

BOYS WOULD WRECK TRAINS.

Jersey Lads of Tender Years Admit Breaking Open Erie Switch.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 8.—Four boys, ranging in ages from seven to fourteen years, were arraigned in the police court today, charged with having broken open a switch on the Greenwood Lake Division of the Erie Railroad in Arlington and shifted the brake on a freight car, with a view to pushing it down on the main track from a siding where it was standing.

The young culprits are Oscar Olsen, his brother, Charles; Leo Benson, and Earl Downey. They all live in Arlington. They admitted their guilt. Downey said he broke open the switch and that the older of the Olsen boys loosened the brake on the car. The boys were paroled in the custody of their parents, who promised Recorder Kelly that they would be well trounced for their attempt at train wrecking.

Alabama Man Shot from Ambush.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., Sept. 8.—M. G. Candee, a prominent resident of Choctoa Bluff, Clarke County, was assassinated at an early hour this morning. Mr. Candee was shot from ambush, and there is not the slightest clue to his murderers. If they are captured it will take hard work to prevent a lynching.

RAINBOW WINS YACHT RACE.

Virginia and Yankee Outsailed in Glen Cove Contest—Neola Beats Weetamoe.

In the New York Yacht Club's race off Glen Cove yesterday for the Autumn Cups all expectations were upset. Cornelius Vanderbilt's seventy-footer Rainbow won in her class, and the Yankee was beaten fairly and squarely by the Virginia. In the sixty-foot class the Weetamoe was beaten by the Neola, and the thirty-six-footer Mimosa III., for the first time in many races, beat the Spasm and Ancatok.

The race, hotly contested from start to finish, was sailed in a moderate breeze that held comparatively steady. The seventies carried cluptopstails and spinnakers, and balloon jibtopsails were set on two legs of the 21½-mile triangular course. The Rainbow was admirably sailed by her skipper, Clayton Haff. Mr. Vanderbilt is at the army manoeuvres in Virginia, and he was represented on board by Newbury D. Lawton and George A. Carmack. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., sailed the Virginia, and handled her much better than heretofore. The Yankee was sailed by her owner, J. Rogers Maxwell.

The start was at 12.25. The thirty-six-footer Spasm had the lead, followed by the Mimosa and the Ancatok. The other two classes started at 12:30. The sixty-footer Weetamoe was first to cross the line, followed by the Yankee, the Rainbow, the Virginia, and the Neola. The course was to a mark off Parsonage Point, thence to another off Shippan Point, and back to the starting line. The first leg was a broad reach. The next leg was another broad reach. The Rainbow gained on this leg by steering a better course. The Yankee and Virginia were so close together that they got into a luffing match and steered to southward of their course. The Virginia, however, secured the lead.

The Virginia not only held her own with the Yankee on the windward work, but also gained. The Rainbow had the race well in hand at the first crossing of tacks, and she never lost any of her advantage. She finished an easy winner, with Virginia second.

The Neola and Weetamoe, astern, meanwhile were making a gallant struggle. The Weetamoe gained somewhat between the second mark and the finish, but not enough to win the race. The Neola won by more than a minute.

The thirty-six-footers had more of a race than was laid out for them. They overlooked the second mark and went to Centre Island, about four miles further eastward, so they actually sailed eighteen miles instead of twelve miles. Following is the summary:

SLOOPS—CLASS H.

LIPTON EAGER TO CHALLENGE.

Hopes Disappointed, However, by Watson's Refusal to Design New Yacht.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—After another conference with George L. Watson, held in London this afternoon, Sir Thomas Lipton announced that Mr. Watson persisted in his refusal to design a challenger for the America's Cup for 1905, giving as his reason ill-health. Sir Thomas asked Mr. Watson simply to design the boat and send a deputy to the United States to supervise her trials, but Mr. Watson refused, saying that if he took the task in hand he would want to see it through.

Sir Thomas said to-night: "Watson's refusal is a bitter disappointment, for I consider him unquestionably the greatest yacht designer in Europe. I hate to see the cup lying in New York without a fight being put up for it. If Herreshoff will come here and be a citizen for a year, I will guarantee him a commission to build a boat. Personally, I desire to fight under the old rule of yacht measurement, but any designers say it is impossible to go to a greater extreme than they have already attempted without endangering the lives of the crew of the yacht when crossing the Atlantic."

Prominent yachtsmen here feel that instead of the New York Yacht Club insisting that a challenge should be submitted first and the question of measurements decided afterward it would be better if the conditions were determined in advance of the challenge.

Cape May Cup Race Entries.

The entries for the Cape May Cup race, which will be started from the Point of Sandy Hook to-morrow afternoon, are the schooners Endymion, Commodore George Lauder, Jr., of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club; the Vergemere, Vice Commodore A. C. Bostwick, of the Larchmont Yacht Club; the Atlantic, Wilson Marshall, and the Corona, Arthur F. Luke. The flagship Delaware, Commodore Frederick G. Bourne of the New York Yacht Club, will accompany the racers over the course and carry the Regatta Committee, S. Nicholson Kane, George A. Carmack, and W. Butler Duncan, Jr. The tug Eugene F. Moran has been chartered for the use of such club members as may wish to see the start. She will leave Pier A, North River, at 10:15 A. M.

TIVERTON WINS CHARTER OAK.

Sweet Marie Defeated by Second Choice in Rich Trotting Event.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 8.—Twenty thousand persons saw the great Charter Oak Stake of $10,000 trotted at Charter Oak Park, in the Grand Circuit meeting this afternoon. The feature was the beating of Sweet Marie, the favorite, by Tiverton, the second choice. Although Tiverton won the major part of the money, Dr. Strong furnished the sensational trotting of the race. He won the first heat in 2:07½, which equaled the fastest mile ever made in this event. Sweet Marie finished second in the first heat, but was out of the running in the other heats, finishing sixth in the second and fifth in the third. In the second heat Tiverton started last and finished first. Dr. Strong was the contender in both heats, and the gray gelding pushed Tiverton hard in the second. In the third heat it was nothing but Tiverton, Andrews going under the wire holding him up.

Much surprise was expressed at Tiverton's finishing seventh in the first heat, but Andrews explained it by saying the gelding's tongue slipped the bit and was nearly torn off. George G., the California gelding, was distanced in the first heat. Angiola was distanced in the second heat, but her driver, Ames, complained to the judges that she was interfered with at the quarter turn by Consuela S. The complaint stood, and Angiola was given a place. She finished third in the last heat and won $500.

The 2:12 trot was unfinished on account of a storm.

HAMBURG BELLE'S STAKES

Sydney Paget's Filly, with Top Weight, Easily Took the Flight.

SHORTHOSE WON HANDICAP

The "mare's month" is September, and this September mares have been even more prominent than in former years in making racing results. It remained for Hamburg Belle to put special emphasis on the truth of the turf proverb; however, when, with the actual top weight, and conceding weight and age together to a fast field, the Futurity heroine of a season ago galloped in first in easy style for the Flight Stakes at Sheepshead Bay yesterday.

Under the special scale of weights governing the race for the Flight, seven furlongs down the Futurity straight, the filly carried 115 pounds and conceded weight to all that ran against her, but the real merit of Hamburg Belle's performance shows best when the scale of weights, based on the entire history of racing, is considered. Hamburg Belle, by the scale in force for the race, conceded 15 pounds or 8 pounds and a year to the Kentucky Derby winner, Alan-a-Dale, and gave to the horses of her own age weights ranging from 5 pounds, to the fast Mineola, up to 15 pounds to Orly II., the stout colt Jocund coming in between with a concession of 10 pounds. The admirers of Hamburg Belle never really wavered, however, for from the moment that the betting was started on the race until post time, the filly from Sydney Paget's stable was the actual favorite, though in the first few minutes of the speculation Alan-a-Dale was rated as equal choice with her. With her 115 pounds up, and ridden by the stable jockey, Lyne, the Futurity winner went to the post at 7 to 5, while Alan-a-Dale then was at 8 to 5.

There was a long delay at the post, but when the barrier was raised the mare was the first to move, and when steadied by Lyne, was joined at once by Alan-a-Dale. The moment that Alan-a-Dale joined her, Hamburg Belle was carried on in spite of her rider's waiting orders, for Alan-a-Dale took command in the moment that Lyne was settling his mount, and went on to set a fast pace. Hamburg Belle went with him, the pair racing head and head to the bend in the Futurity course, where Hamburg Belle on the outside, without the least show of effort, passed the five-year-old horse and showed in front. Close on the post Alan-a-Dale began to drop away, and the added horse of the pair that ran in the interest of J. A. Drake, Jocund, went on from the rear and easily ran past Alan-a-Dale, but never got near Hamburg Belle, the filly simply romping through the last furlong and winning with ease by a length and a half, while Jocund beat Alan-a-Dale a similar distance for the place.

The second stake event of the day's card, the Russet Handicap, at one mile and a half over the turf course, produced a spirited contest. Six horses ran, with Shorthose the top weight, at 117 pounds, while the veteran campaigner Carbuncle started favorite. Shorthose slipped to the front on the rail and with the most speed at the end won cleverly by a length and a half from Carbuncle, while Major Daingerfield finished but a moderate third. In the opening event, the E. R. Thomas entry, Niblick, won rather cleverly. Summaries:

REBUILDING THE PARTY.

Many Democrats who were not confident that the Democratic candidate for President would be elected this year had hoped that the campaign at least might firmly unite the party and put it in good fighting condition for 1908. They are becoming skeptical about that even, chiefly because the campaign managers appear to trust the fortunes of their candidate wholly to transient and ephemeral issues. The questions they have so far seen fit to put before the voters are wholly personal to President ROOSEVELT. Disregard of the Constitution and the laws, and the peril due to fondness for war and adventure offer subjects for campaign discussion so long as Mr. ROOSEVELT is the Republican candidate. They will probably have no interest or pertinence four years hence, when the Republicans will put some other nominee in the field. Mr. ROOSEVELT is unique. The Republicans will not find his like in 1908. We do not think they will seek for his like.

The Democratic managers, therefore, are storing up no energy for future use. Their work will have efficacy only during the campaign. All their toil and all their expenditure will go for nothing if Mr. ROOSEVELT is elected on Nov. 8.

If they had chosen to make the campaign on the living issues, if they had made their appeal to the voters on questions of continuing interest and vitality, the fruits of what they are now doing would have matured in the years to come. An educational and aggressive campaign against the Republican policy of protection as represented in the Dingley tariff would have given Democrats something to think about during the next four years. The party would have come together and stayed together upon an issue that would have outlasted the campaign. As matters have been managed the party will come out of the fight very much as it went into it. It will have had nothing to talk about, nothing to think about save the Roosevelt issue, which will disappear when the Republican candidate in 1908 takes the field. Meanwhile the old divisions of 1896 and 1900 are free to do their mischievous work, should any man or any clique find it worth while to revive them.

The rebuilding of the party would have been helped on by the introduction of issues of permanent and vital interest like the tariff, and Judge PARKER's canvass would have been very much helped thereby. Doubtless the gentlemen at headquarters would have improved Judge PARKER's chance of election very much more by inviting Democratic newspaper editors all over the country to discuss the tariff and reciprocity than they have done by inviting these editors to come to New York and eat dinner. Perhaps, like Gen. TROCHU during the siege of Paris, these gentlemen have a plan of campaign. If so, let us hope that it may one of these days be revealed.

A CHELSEA PLAYGROUND.

A very much neglected part of Manhattan so far as public parks are concerned is the west side between Hudson Park at Varick Street and the new De Witt Clinton Park at Fifty-third. Here is a stretch of more than fifty blocks in a densely populated part of the borough which is unrelieved by a park or playground. To meet this condition the Chelsea Improvement Society has made a suggestion that seems reasonable and certainly cannot be called a demand for the expenditure of a great sum. It is the laying out of the block between Ninth and Tenth Avenues and Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Streets as a playground, leaving the public school intact and allowing room at the Ninth Avenue end for one of the new Carnegie Libraries.

The society has prepared a chart of this block, showing a baseball field, a large swimming pool, swings for the children, lawns and fountains in front of the Carnegie Library, a kiosk where the municipal and other bands may play on stated days, and similar arrangements for popular recreation. It is in fact a playground, not a small park from which the populace has to be kept in order that the trees and grass may exist; and there can be no question that this kind of breathing place is more immediately needed and will do far more direct good than a small park. During recent years the west side has not only become closer settled, but the volume of traffic on Eighth and Ninth Avenues and the cross streets has swelled to proportions never known before. Bands of children play on the asphalted streets, in constant danger from vehicles, or they roam about at mischief because they have no place to play in. Householders who have trees, shrubs, or flowers in front of their dwellings must be always on the alert against these youthful marauders, who, after all, are only following their natural instinct to pluck green bough and flower. Had they places where they might play or watch games, listen to music, and swim at stated hours a great deal of that energy which often leads them gradually into petty crimes would find a healthful vent. It seems very little to ask that one block in so large a quarter of the borough should be set aside for this purpose. On the east side much has been done for playgrounds and parks. In the Ninth Assembly District, lying between Twentieth and Thirtieth Streets, the population is estimated at 45,000. It is this fair-sized town without a park or playground which the Chelsea Improvement Society hopes to relieve. The sooner the better.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE PEOPLE.

There is one phrase in Judge PARKER's brief address to the visiting Democratic editors that is not only characteristic of the man who uttered it and of the campaign on his behalf now in progress, but is a theme worth thinking about by the voters. Judge PARKER spoke of "the unhurried and well-considered judgment of the people" as a power which under discerning guidance will "hold its place in the front rank of the unfaltering and vigorous march of National progress." If this Presidential election were to be determined by the "unhurried and well-considered judgment of the people" we firmly believe that Judge PARKER would be the next President.

The deliberate judgments of a body of men so intelligent as the voters of the United States are in the highest degree apt to be wise. It is their snap judgments, it is their hasty, ill-considered decisions that betray them into error. Judge PARKER's candidacy ought to be a most inviting one to an electorate in the habit of forming its judgments deliberately. The American people ought to prefer him, trained in the law, and by temperament as well as by breeding a faithful respecter of it, to a President who is not a little given to being a law unto himself. President ROOSEVELT, taking advantage of a treaty stipulation which gave him the right to protect transit on the Panama Railroad, ordered the United States forces to exclude the forces of Colombia from one hundred miles of the coast line of that republic. He had not a shadow of authority for doing that—no more authority than he would have had to order the North Atlantic squadron to bombard and occupy Southampton or Havre. Everybody knows that if Judge PARKER had been President he would have resorted to no such lawless courses to bolster up the Panama conspirators. For that reason Judge PARKER would be a safer President than Mr. ROOSEVELT. For that reason—and other instances which contribute to the validity of this reason will occur to every reader—a people given to unhurried and well-considered judgments ought by a decisive majority to prefer the safe candidate of Esopus to the not wholly safe candidate of Oyster Bay.

Political experience tells us, however, that diligent teaching and exhortation wonderfully assist the American voter in making up his mind. His unhurried judgment is apt to be sounder if the facts are put before him by skillful and active campaign managers.

THE SUBWAY MOTORMAN.

The lot of the subway motorman may be monotonous, but it cannot be denied that in proportion to the amount of skill he is required to possess, in addition to a normal endowment of health and senses, he will be very liberally paid. An average young man with the average endowment of intelligence could qualify for his duties in a fraction of the time required to learn one operation in any mechanical trade under the best conditions of instruction and opportunity. To the trade of the machinist, for example, his vocation is as grinding a handorgan to playing the piano. His power is supplied, and the highly refined mechanism of the controller places it absolutely at his command. He can take much or little, as suits his momentary purpose. He turns it on and off as he would open and close a faucet on a Croton water pipe. As compared with the work of the street car motorman, his task is easy. He has a clear and unobstructed track, with infrequent stops, and the only thing he must avoid is trying to pass another train which happens to be ahead of him. In the equipment of the subway every contingency has been so perfectly provided for that he cannot very well make a mistake, even if so reckless as to want to. He is quite sure that no wagon will cut across his path from the recesses of a side street, that fire engines and extension ladders on wheels will not smash into him, and that children will not play tag and tip-cat on his right of way. When the novelty of his position wears off he will have absolutely nothing in a day's experience to rack his nerves or send cold chills coursing up and down his spinal column.

Whether he is overpaid or not is a matter of judgment. In connection with wages for labor high and low are relative terms. It is obvious, however, that the wage of three dollars and a half for a ten-hour day in operating a subway motor should command the services of very good men, and that the Interborough management is justified in fixing and maintaining a high standard of fidelity and physical fitness, and of efficiency in train operation. Whether a relatively high wage will secure these we shall know when the results of a year's operation of the subway are available for study.

SCHOOL ACCOMMODATIONS.

It would be of public interest to know why it is that such of our officials as are charged with responsibility for the provision of adequate school accommodations for the children of New York usually wait until the second week of September to manifest interest in the question of the relation between the accommodations available and the number of children needing them.

Superintendent MAXWELL is of the opinion that the number of sittings which will be needed when the public schools reopen will exceed the requirements of last year by about 50,000. This conclusion is not the result of any recent discovery. It could have been reached by calculation eight or nine months ago. Nor is it a discovery that the troubles in the building trades were operating to delay the completion of school buildings exigently needed, and that under the best conditions which are possible in the circumstances it will be necessary to make all kinds of temporary provision for children presenting themselves for admission to the classes of the primary and grammar grades. This could have been foreseen three or even twelve months ago. Perhaps it was, but if so it does not appear that all has been done that might have been done to avoid the necessity which now confronts the Board of Education of putting 125,000 of the 655,000 school children of New York on half time. Statistically, we are no better off than we were at this time last year, and judging from the analogies of experience we shall be no better off in September, 1905, than we are now.

The active and intelligent interest which Mayor MCCLELLAN is showing in this matter could not be directed to a better end than in impressing the Board of Education with a realizing sense of the fact that it should not again permit itself to be taken by surprise, as it obviously is this year.

SOCIALISTS DISCORDANT.

The annual meeting of International Socialists, which has just closed at Amsterdam, has, according to the will of the intelligent majority, condemned to Socialistic displeasure and disgrace all members who hold office in other than Socialistic Governments. As there are at present no Socialistic States, the condemnation was applied to all office holders. Its particular animus, however, was directed against M. JAURES, the brilliant and eloquent leader of the French Parliamentary Socialists. This is not surprising, when it is recalled that M. MILLERAND was similarly convicted of "lèse socialisme" three years ago for having dared to accept a portfolio in the "middle-class" Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry.

The case of M. JAURES would be quite unimportant were it not for the fact that, while the French Reds took the initiative in condemning M. MILLERAND, the honor of JAURES's conviction belongs to Herr BEBEL and the German delegates. The German's argument is simple and convincing. It stalks forth in the following logic: German Socialists are not permitted to govern Germany, and yet Germany is better governed than France. Therefore, why should French Socialists permit themselves to hold office under the French Government? Good Socialists should stand aloof from all administrative offices until Socialism prevails. They should not do in France what they are not permitted to do in Germany. "To be sure," to use the exact words of the philosophical German leader, "France has universal suffrage and Germany has not. But it should be remembered that this boon is owed to Germany. It was BISMARCK who achieved it by capturing NAPOLEON III."

From the Coventry into which he has been sent M. JAURES replies with wonderful good nature: "The Party in Germany is admirable, but it is also weak. You received the electoral right from the Sovereign; we won it at the barricades. Your political impotency should find other expression than attempting to burden us with the weight of your formulas. Your development is limited to the will of your Sovereign; ours to the votes of the French people. As democracy develops it is our own method that will develop and will be applied to all free countries."

The Germans and the French Reds want everything or nothing. It is this uncompromising attitude, in all parties or associations similarly afflicted, which brings them into contempt. Practically the demagogues say: We will not permit the world to benefit by whatever excellent qualities we have. We must be in a position to do our worst or you shall have none of us. There will probably always be, however, men like MM. MILLERAND and JAURES. They will be found quite sufficient to the needs of social progress.

THE STRIKE EPIDEMIC.

The condition existing in the field of labor may best be characterized as that of a strike epidemic. Such epidemics usually, if not invariably, occur in connection with the readjustment of productive and distributive industry after a season of exceptional activity. When the tendency of prices and wages is upward and advances are either voluntarily offered or may be had for the asking, strikes are entered into very reluctantly by satisfied wage earners who are skeptical of the ability of their leaders to secure them any greater advantage than they then enjoy. When the tide turns and wages show a tendency to shrink, from the competition of idle men seeking employment, the unions brace their feet for stubborn resistance and protest every cent of proposed wage reduction. Frequently they succeed in maintaining their scale as the nominal wage in their trades, but this never interferes with the gradual reduction of the actual wage rate, but it does have the effect of reducing the membership of the unions very rapidly. This reduction does not appear on the rolls, for the reason that men in arrears of dues and who do not attend meetings are still carried by thousands in the hope and belief that when conditions improve they will resume their obligations and duties.

Just this process has been witnessed after every season of general activity and high prices for the past quarter of a century. If the strike epidemic is becoming more and more acute with each recurrence, it is because the trades union machine is better organized and the altruistic affiliations of unrelated trades closer than formerly. That the movement of wages up or down is not materially affected, if affected at all, by strikes is the view held by the wisest and most advanced students of economic questions. This conviction is expressed by Prof. CAIRNES in his "Leading Principles of Political Economy" in the following bold challenge of the contention of the labor leaders that through organization labor has emancipated itself from the conditions of the Middle Ages:

> My conclusion is that, though combination, whether employed by capitalists or by laborers, may succeed in controlling for a time the price of labor, it is utterly powerless, in the hands of either, to effect a permanent alteration in the market rate of wages as determined by supply and demand. The utmost power which I am disposed to concede to trades unions over wages, where they seek their ends by compelling a positive increase of investment, is that of accelerating an advance already, so to speak, in the air, and which would come in the end without their intervention. Where strikes have been permanently successful, where they have not merely gained to-day what has been lost to-morrow, but have issued in a permanently improved condition of the workmen, I believe the explanation of their success will always be found in a state of trade exceptionally prosperous which would in any case before long have attracted an increase of capital, and resulted in an enlarged demand for labor.

Many causes have contributed to the improvement of the general condition of labor, and the least of these is what the unions have been able to do for it. What they have added at one end of the scale in fixing the minimum wage above the earning power of the least skillful it has taken off the other end by demanding a sacrifice of some part of the special advantage belonging to the more skillful. This is beautifully altruistic, no doubt, but it is not quite practical. The present strike epidemic promises no advantage to labor, temporary or permanent, unless it be found in the establishment of the standard of the open shop in many trades, and the promise of its adoption in all.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Mayor CUTLER of Rochester has been having a rather interesting correspondence with the State Excise Commissioner in regard to revoking the licenses and forfeiting the bonds of two divekeepers who had been convicted in Police Court and fined $100 each. As the hotels run by these men are of the very worst sort, the Mayor was not content with a punishment which was in effect a mere addition to the license fee and imposed upon the police an unending labor in getting new evidence on which to secure new fines, and he appealed to the Commissioner for action that would put the men permanently out of business. This was on July 6, and the answer was immediate and encouraging; but time went on, and as nothing seemed to be doing, toward the end of August the Mayor wrote again, asking the reason for the delay in what he considered particularly plain and simple cases. In a long letter of reply the Commissioner said that as the evidence submitted to him—the record of the two convictions, one after trial and the other on confession—had seemed to him an insufficient basis for the action desired, he had set a special agent at work hunting for more, and before this had been secured all the courts with jurisdiction had closed for the Summer. He then entered in detail into a presentation of the duties of his department and local police in dealing with cases of this sort. The special agents, he said, were few and were best employed in civil prosecutions with a view to protecting the holders of tax certificates from the illegal competition of those who sold liquor without a license. The enforcement of the criminal law, he declared with some warmth, was properly the work of the police, who had the numbers, the resources, and the power to do it promptly and effectually. The Mayor was reminded that "Monroe County, since 1896, has received in cash, under the liquor tax law, a revenue of upward of $1,500,000, and has been further benefited by a diminished State tax to the extent of nearly another million, making a total benefit to the taxpayers of your county of more than two and one-half millions of dollars, an amount surely sufficient to warrant the expenditure by the proper local authorities of such a reasonable sum of money as is necessary to secure a decent enforcement of the criminal provisions of the statute against flagrant and defiant violators of your city." There the case stands for the present, with the Mayor somewhat puzzled to know why he was lectured so sternly, since he thinks that his police did what they could to provide the Excise Commissioner with the ammunition needed for undertaking an effective campaign against the divekeepers.

—In a public-spirited effort to remedy the failure of the Florida Legislature to make any appropriation for exploiting the achievements and resources of the State at the Louisiana Purchase Fair, the Jacksonville Times-Union has issued for distribution there by carefully selected agents one of those "special editions" which are now only ordinary incidents of journalism, though a few years ago they would have been regarded, both for size and quality, as truly marvelous productions. This particular example of what a newspaper can do, if it exerts itself, consists of sixty-two big pages, bound in pamphlet form and provided with a brilliantly illuminated cover. The paper, of course, is good, since the contents consist in great part of admirably executed and printed pictures. These show the notable features of practically every important town in Florida and illustrate all its industries and its products. The impression produced by these pictures and the accompanying text is very different from the notion of the State held by people who have never visited it. The surprisingly tropical quality of many of its scenes is strikingly presented for the benefit of those who think of Florida merely as a Winter resort; but care is also taken to leave no doubt that Florida is well populated with energetic folks who are actively engaged in a lot of business more important than the entertainment of Northern "guests." Naturally enough, the amazingly lively little city of Jacksonville, the real capital of the State and the head centre of its activities, occupies a prominent place in these pages, but the other towns and the agricultural regions are not neglected. A peculiarity of the issue is that it contains almost no advertisements, at any rate of the obvious kind. The purpose is to advertise Florida as a whole, and it has been very successfully attained.

—We cannot see more than the merest traces of reality in the grievance of the correspondent who found such vehement fault yesterday with the selection of Manassas as the scene of the military manoeuvres now in progress. On this ground, it is true, American citizens once engaged in deadly strife, but that was almost half a century ago, and, though the memories of that unhappy time are still vivid in many minds, the animosities have for the most part either passed away or become academic and impersonal. There were good professional reasons why a historic battlefield was a better place for the instruction of militiamen in the art and practice of war than a place with associations entirely peaceful would have been, and, admitting the need or necessity for such a selection, surely none could have been more wise, more tactful, or more likely to minimize the dangers that loom so large before our correspondent than this one is. The scene of two Union defeats, Manassas is ground that certainly can be trodden by the Southern man with no sense of humiliation, while the Northerner there can easily console himself with the thought of where the ultimate victory lay. Thus are things very fairly evened up, and so far as has been reported the soldiers engaged in the operations have felt none of the dreadful emotions for which they have been pitied by too sensitive people remaining quietly at home. There has been, of course, no attempt to duplicate the ancient conflicts, and no division of the troops on sectional lines. Had either of these things been done, such apprehensions as those of our troubled correspondent would have been justified. Both mistakes, however, have been carefully avoided, and, a little silly squabbling over the color problem apart, nothing has happened to indicate that the relations of the different forces and regiments are not as friendly as can be those of men engaged in an imitation of deadly war. They are jealous for present, not past, glory, and they are looking forward, not backward. As for the claim that "the utility of sham battles is much questioned," its weight is that of the people who do the questioning. So far as we know, it is strictly confined to those who declare all war unnecessary. All that the military experts ever questioned was the utility of sham battles conducted along obsolete lines for purposes of picturesque display. They smile at dense columns of cavalry charging across a plain under the leadership of an Emperor, but they discuss soberly enough hard work of the kind now doing at Manassas.

—Explaining his remarkable dictum that "nobody can be disorderly in a saloon," Magistrate POOL has managed to bring his words within at least hearing distance of reason. He was, it seems, referring only to intoxicated persons, and for such a person to be "disorderly," under the definition of the law, he must indulge in threatening, abusive, or insulting behavior, "with intent to provoke a breach of the peace." And "intent" the Magistrate holds to be lacking when a man has lost the use of his senses, or, in any case, to be extremely hard to prove, and he is strongly inclined to place all responsibility for the conduct of a saloon's patrons upon the man who in person or by proxy stands behind the bar and sells its wares. There are many whom this sort of reasoning will highly please, and few who will deny that it contains an element of truth. And yet the assertion that "nobody can be disorderly in a saloon" is more than surprising as the utterance of a Police Magistrate.

THE SUBWAY STATION AT SEVENTY-SECOND STREET.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The citizen who finds himself casually in the neighborhood of Seventy-second Street and the Boulevard and catches a glimpse of the subway station which stands in the middle of the street at that point, will be apt to vent his astonishment by some such expression as "Suffering saints. What's that?"

We have many ugly things in New York. Some are uglier than others no doubt, but the thing which leads them all and for ugliness should take the first prize, is the station in question. Squat, formless, and disgustingly symmetrical, it suggests nothing so much as a car shed with a penthouse on either side. Its exaggerated doors at either end, which would pass an old-fashioned wood burning locomotive with its hydrocephalic smoke stack, do not convey the impression that they are intended to be used by pedestrians. Its windows are so placed that they suggest neither use nor ornament. It has a lantern top of the pattern usual in mill construction, and stands so low that its most conspicuous feature is the upper side of its standing-seam tin roof. Its color is a monotonous imitation of street dust. The ghastly attempt at ornamentation which the designer has ventured on the ends of the middle section of the building, consisting of meaningless arches and stone walls, only serves to make ridiculous what in the severe simplicity of utility might have been forgiven, but which as it stands is unpardonable. It has absolutely not one redeeming feature.

For what is our Municipal Art Commission created and maintained if it permits such a monstrosity to be built in midstreet in one of the most beautiful residential sections of Manhattan?

There was a chance in this station, considering its position and environment, to make something beautiful within the cost of the nightmare horror we have. One corner might have been thrown up into a minaret, iron and glass in graceful combinations might have been substituted for the dead walls of yellow brick, and the deadly symmetry of the present design relieved by almost anything in the way of a tasteful arrangment of parts.

Is it not competent to have indicted as a public nuisance a building which offends the senses and induces nausea as this one undoubtedly does? Better still, is there no way in which such insults to the public taste may be avoided in future? This one has probably come to stay, a monument to the fact that however capable the engineers of the Rapid Transit Commission are they are hopelessly incapable in matters of taste in architecture. To make sure that no more such monuments are built to commemorate what we had rather forget is worth an effort.

WEST SIDER.

New York, Sept. 8, 1904.

Landlords and Tenants.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to the query in this day's issue of Flat Dweller. With the laws now in vigor a poor tenant has no protection. Landlords are authorized to hold up, harass, and dispossess a tenant with or without reason.

DISPROOF OF A TRUST CHARGE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The action of the New York Central Railroad Company in respect to a new union station is a refutation of many of the arguments against the so-called trusts. Under some definitions of a trust, there might be some ground upon which to base an allegation against this company, although with no shadow of truth or justice. It has gained control, through legitimate action, of several other trunk lines and minor lines, and has united them together in a strong, compact, admirable system, operated together as a single system, with the most satisfactory results to the public and to the stockholders. Yet no charges of violation of law, common or statutory, could be sustained against the company in connection with its merger of the various lines which it comprises.

But a few years ago the New York Central Company enlarged at great expense its union station in New York. From a layman's standpoint, that station would seem to be fully adequate for the public requirements. But the company has grown vastly since it has acquired control of the affiliated lines, has become a vast agent of transportation, and exponent of progress. Its own inherent progress and success demand enlarged facilities for the handling of the immense volume of traffic which its own independent action has developed. From a business standpoint, therefore, as well as to serve the public interests, the company has undertaken a great improvement which will not only accelerate the movement of heavy traffic but will greatly enhance the property interests of the city and State.

There was no urgent demand for the erection of a vast station at Forty-second Street. But the company whose interests are centred there—acting in response to business and public exigencies, and with the financial strength and resources developed by the control and operation of a great system, has acted as a volunteer. And the results will be far-reaching. The company has prepared plans for the erection of a great station and terminal facilities to cost something like $35,000,000, the purpose of which is to give the city the best and most adequate terminal facilities. The expenditure of this vast sum will set in motion other enterprises or improvements which must, within the next ten or fifteen years, call for an expenditure of $75,000,000. And all this will increase the measure of prosperity of city and State, will vastly enhance the taxable property, and afford work and wages to a great army of persons.

The erection of this great station illustrates one of the beneficial results of the merger of railway interests, and the operation of various roads in working harmony. It is through the working harmony of the New York Central with its natural, affiliated lines, that the company can afford this vast sum for a station. With the lines comprised within this system working independently, with more or less unnecessary cost, and a ruinous competition, no such station as that which is now promised to the city could have been thought of. That mammoth station is to be one of the fruits of the working out of a legitimate scheme of "community of interests."

PATERNALISM AND SOCIALISM.

This Man Sees Little Difference Between the Two Classes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of your bright and dazzling contemporaries seems to be enjoying itself, whether it enlightens its readers or not, by its almost daily reference to the Huns in the background. Isn't there such a thing as being too bright and too dazzling?

The Hun, who has been forced to "go away back and sit down," is certainly in the background, but why is he especially to be feared?

Are not the Goths and Vandals of paternalism, who lead the Republican forces, quite as dangerous? Did they not come out of the same cradle of socialism? Have they not the same insatiable appetites, the same inborn propensities, the same instincts of savagery and destruction?

The plain man in the hills is not able to distinguish the two classes with the same predatory habits.

Is there really any preference in being slowly but surely consumed by paternalism rather than being devoured by socialism? If the Goths and Vandals are not brothers to the Huns, aren't they at least blood cousins? And is there no way to escape the whole brood of paternalists, the well-organized and disciplined Goths and Vandals, as well as the scattered bands of Huns in the background, far back? HICKSITE.

TIME FOR ACTION.

Need of Aggressive Campaign on Democratic Lines.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I consider your editorial in to-day's issue entitled, "The Campaign Thus Far," the most intelligent presentation of fact which has recently come to my notice.

Without doubt "the Democracy" has as righteous a cause this year as ever in its history, and what we now need is an aggressive campaign along the lines you indicate.

The tariff, reciprocity, the record of the opposing candidate, and the watchward, "Safe and sane," should be the themes for a campaign which should go down in the history of the Democratic Party as one of offensive, rather than defensive, policy.

The result in Vermont and Arkansas are straws, no doubt, but much may be done in two months.

AWAITING THE WORD FROM ESOPUS.

From The Brooklyn Eagle.

The question to be determined by the people has been presented by THE TIMES in the simplest possible form. It is whether the country will gain by a change at Washington. From no place other than Esopus can an affirmative answer come. And the answer must be conclusive. It must renew the impulse given to the cause when the telegram was duly delivered at St. Louis.

"Perfidious Albion" Still Alive.

From The London Chronicle.

The French tradition of perfidious Albion is not quite dead. A writer in Gil Blas recounts this experience: "A day or two ago a man who in ordinary affairs displays more than average intelligence assured me positively that the English Admiralty had placed M. Pelletan at the head of the Ministry of Marine, and that England was paying him millions to disorganize the French Navy. As I could not refrain from a shout of laughter, my friend added, with a frown: 'You don't believe it! Why, I have it from an absolutely sure source!' 'An English source, of course,' I remarked." In the old days the "gold of Pitt-Coburg" was believed by every Frenchman to be the instrumant of French misfortunes. Its ghost still walks.

Sure to Be.

From The Chicago Record-Herald.

"Are you a fatalist? Do you believe what is to be will be?"

"Well, yes, to a certain extent. I believe, for instance, when I draw my salary that the coal trust and the meat trust and the grocer and the milkman and the rest of the people who make it their business to get my money away from me are going to do it just as surely as the sun is goin' to rise to-morrow morning."

THE GOVERNORSHIP CANDIDACY.

Not to be Determined by Past Records of Vote Getting.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read the letter addressed to you by "Independent Democrat," dated Sept. 2. Your correspondent advocates Mr. Grout's nomination to the Governorship "because he has always been a vote-getter," and declares that Mr. Stanchfield should not be nominated because he has already been nominated and defeated, and that for a like reason Mr. Shepard should not be nominated. Could anything be more unfair or even silly than to quote the majority against Mr. Stanchfield in 1900? Every one knew that he was leading a forlorn hope in this State on the ticket headed by Mr. Bryan; and, in fact, at the time, his vote was deemed creditable, for while McKinley's plurality in the State was 143,606, Odell's plurality was only 111,126. So far as that vote goes it is a commendation of Mr. Stanchfield's candidacy. Does any one suppose that the plurality of 156,000 by which Senator Hill was defeated in 1894 truly represented his general political strength in a normal year? The facts as to Mr. Grout are these: In 1895, having been a member of the Independent Democratic Brooklyn organization, of which Mr. Shepard was then a leader, being a member of its Mayoralty Convention of the Independent Democrats, and having stood against the regular organization with what was supposed to be a large part of the Independent Democratic organization, on the same day he accepted the regular nomination for Mayor of Brooklyn, with the result that, although his party in Brooklyn that year polled 84,199 votes for the State ticket, he received only 75,330. That is to say, he ran nearly 9,000 votes behind his ticket. Mr. Shepard accepted an Independent Democratic nomination upon the statement openly made that there was no expectation of carrying the election, but only of preserving the integrity and power of the Independent Democratic organization, disrupted by the secession of Mr. Grout and his allies. That organization, instead of claiming to have enrolled, as your correspondent says, 80,000 Democrats, never claimed an enrollment one-quarter as large. Mr. Shepard's poll of over 9,500 votes in a miserably theoretical campaign was a remarkable personal vote, and represented the balance of power.

Every one well knows that when Mr. Shepard was the Democratic candidate in 1901 his party had a merely desperate chance, with an estimated plurality against Tammany Hall in the entire city of 100,000, a plurality conceded by every intelligent person to have been enormously reduced by Mr. Shepard's conduct of the campaign. The claim that the figures show that he was a weak candidate is sufficiently met by the fact that whereas in the Borough of Manhattan Mr. Van Wyck, as a candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court, polled 129,476 votes; Mr. Unger, for District Attorney, 149,644 votes, and Mr. Fromme, for Borough President, 133,294 votes, Mr. Shepard polled 136,629, being several thousand more than his associates on the ticket. With respect to the renomination of defeated candidates it would perhaps enlighten your correspondent to be informed that Lincoln was nominated for the Presidency within two years after he was defeated in his Senatorial campaign; that when Roosevelt was nominated for Governor, his last political campaign had been that in which he was a badly defeated candidate for Mayor; that Jefferson and Jackson were both defeated candidates for the Presidency when they were renominated and elected to the Presidency; that in 1868, when the conclusion of the civil war left their political fortunes at a low ebb, the Democrats nominated for the Presidency Gov. Seymour, who four years before had been defeated as the Democratic candidate for Governor, and who thereupon, as Presidential candidate, carried the State of New York by a majority of 10,000 and the State of New Jersey by 3,000. When Grover Cleveland was nominated in 1892 he was a defeated candidate. Indeed, Mr. Grout himself, when he was nominated for the Borough Presidency of Brooklyn, to which he was afterward elected, was a defeated Mayoralty candidate.

Having been for some time engaged in work in Brooklyn, which has given me an opportunity to observe the local situation and the respective influence of men who have been prominent in local politics in that borough, I feel that the foregoing statistics are only indicative of larger facts with reference to the qualities of leadership and the personal power of the men mentioned in "Independent Democrat's" letter; and it would really seem that the large question of what it is wise for the Democratic Party to do in this State would better be determined upon something less narrow and silly than mere arithmetical computations.

TEACHING—AN EMPTY HONOR!

That's Hogan's Conclusion and It's Based on Experience.

W. M. Stone in The Chattanooga Times.

"I see your daughter Mary Ann has been elected by the Board av Education to be a teacher of the coming generation," says Casey.

"Yes," says Hogan, "ever since the lass graduated from the public schools her head has been turned entirely, so Oi spoke to me friend Donnelly av the Sixth Ward, who promised to whisper a kind word to Schnapps of the brewery, who is Chairman av the School Comity, and Mary Ann was jooly elected. But, Casey, Oi find afther a little investigation 'tis only an empty honor.

"Now there is me two lads, Denny and Thomas. Divil a bit av schoolin' had aither av them except the schoolin' av worldly experience. I brought them up under me own paryenthial eyes right here in me little bar until they arrived at a votin' age and sought the avocations of life that appealed to their taste and likin'. Denny, me older lad, who was always considered a bad man in a schrap, is now on the police force and Thomas is a fireman afther me own heart.

"Now, would you believe me, these lads gets $75 a month apiece for praserving the peace and the property av the people, a vacation every year, freedom av speech, freedom av the bars, the freedom av the street cars and the public places av amusement, and a chanst at a pension later on, while me daughter Mary Ann is paid only $30 a month for instructing sixty little haythens in their manners, morals, music, art, and physical culture, and av this amount she is compelled to contribute $2.40 a month to the street railway octopus for fares, dress in a manner becomin' the dignity av the calling, attend the teachers' meetings and the scientific lectures, look pleasant and take the sass and impidence av the coming race enthrusted to her care, without the authority to strike back for insults or insubordination, and if there is wan brat in the sixty with the divil's own nature that she fails to subjue be kindness she is marked down by the Superintendent as a poor disciplitarian. The poor girrul is pinin' away, and I want you to tell me how we can get this injustice regulated."

"Have the City Attorney write a new code," says Casey.

THE REASON.

I like the man who stands four-square
To every wind that blows;
Who does not dodge and duck his head
As on his way he goes.

It is not for his virtues rare,
Ah, no, 'tis none of that;
It is because I like to stare
And watch him chase his hat.

M'CLELLAN SCORED FOR IGNORING SCIENTISTS

None of City's Officers Attended Society's Banquet.

RAMSAY'S NEW DISCOVERY

Unfolds Important Secret to Scientific World — America Described with Pleasantry as to Politics.

Because all the high city officers sent excuses instead of attending the banquet given in honor of the Society of Chemical Industry at the Waldorf-Astoria last night the toastmaster, Prof. Charles H. Chandler of Columbia University, began the evening's speechmaking by paying his respects to the municipal régime.

"We asked the Mayor to welcome you," said Dr. Chandler. "We asked him, but 'twas 'impossible' for him to come. We asked the President of the Board of Aldermen, sometimes Acting Mayor, but he had to be out of town—'impossible to come.' We asked all of them, down to the white angels who sweep the streets—'impossible to come,' that was the answer everywhere. And so there is nobody to welcome you but the chemists of the city, and we shall do the best we can."

It was explained later that the Mayor refused the invitation on the ground that he was on his vacation, but that he had already returned to the city and that President Fornes took a trip to Boston instead of going to the dinner.

Sir William Ramsay, who was introduced as the greatest of living chemists, referred to the five elements he had discovered, and told the society about his newest experiments. He closed by making an announcement which several prominent scientists declared to be one of the most important divulged in the chemical world in years. He said:

"It seems to me that we may be on the eve of the discovery of the origin of the ordinary elements which may be the products of the breaking down of radio-active elements of high atomic weight."

Leaving science for a moment, Sir William said that one great result of the society's investigations was that they helped toward harmony between Great Britan and the United States.

"I don't see," he said, "why Britain and America cannot always buck together in peace and harmony—not, indeed, under one Government, for that is impossible, but ever united against all comers."

Dr. H. W. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, was introduced as a man who would tell the visitors all about this country.

"Our country, in the first place, is very prosperous," said Dr. Wiley. "We don't even haggle over spending a few dozen millions for an undug ditch. Of course, you know that is not good business; but it is good politics, and with us business don't count for anything when politics is concerned. We are a great country. We pay out $143,000,000 a year in pensions to the few people who weren't killed in the civil war. That's another feature. On the eve of this election you visitors hear our worthy President of the United States branded as a violator of the Constitution and as the worst man about. But if an enemy of the land were to appear none would be quicker to rally to his support than those same persons who are abusing him. You must not get the wrong idea of America by listening to all this talk.

"Why, you'd think Parker was a man who never did anything but take a bath! Don't believe it. If the Democrats elect him—"

"No politics here," shouted some one.

"If they elect him," continued the speaker, "he'll make a fine President. Any man whom the people of this country choose would do that. I want to say I belong to the party in power. But I tell you, if the enemy wins at the polls, the 4th of March will find me on the same side."

He said the growth of science in America had not been equaled anywhere else. Farmers at last had learned, he said, how to cross honey bees with fire flies in order to make them work all night.

"Why, we have reached such a state of scientific knowledge," he continued, "that we have produced a fine cross between the potato and the onion. We plant the potatoes and onions in alternate rows. The onions are so strong and draw so much water from the eyes of the potatoes that the land needs no artificial irrigation for miles around."

In the morning Sir William Ramsay discussed and criticised the modern methods of teaching scientific analysis. Here are some of his observations:

"The training of a bricklayer will never make a man an architect. Nor will the dry research of a grammarian train a new poet. It is the inventive faculty that must be cultivated.

"There are some persons whose dislike of the investigations of nature is ingrained. I remember advising a lad to abandon the study of chemistry for literature. He became the editor of a newspaper.

"In results the chief question is not 'What does he know?' but 'What has he done?'

"Above all, not too much teaching. The essence of scientific progress is the well-worn method of trial and failure.

"Routine is fatal to originality.

"Choosing a fellow-teacher is like choosing a wife. A lady chosen by the vote of the families may prove a success, and no doubt often does. If the wife were chosen in cool blood by the man who is to live with her, after careful inquiry into her antecedents, hereditary and otherwise, her temper, her suitability for the duties which a wife is supposed to perform, there would be fewer unsuccessful marriages. The analogy breaks down, for, unless it is a case of marrying a widow, previous experience should not be a possible consideration.

"In the older I get the less I believe in a university degree as a test of capacity.

"A sound judgment, though it may be a slow one; persistence in struggling against obstacles, the knowledge of where to get information when required, and to use it when found, and the inventive faculty—these are the qualities required for success, and they can be gained only after long-continued observation.

"It is true that to earn money is a necessity. But it is not the chief aim. Money should be earned as a reward for useful labor, and not for success in scholastic competitions.

"The scientific curiosity of to-day often becomes the trade necessity of to-morrow."

PRESIDENT'S LIBRARY GIFT.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 8.—President Roosevelt to-day presented to the Oyster Bay Free Library the chair which was given to him when he was Governor of New York. It is a high-backed mahogany affair, richly carved and upholstered in leather. On the back is a silver plate bearing this inscription:

> The State of New York,
> Theodore Roosevelt, Governor, 1898-1900.

In addition to the chair, the President also gave to the library fifty volumes of history. No formalities attended the presentation of the gifts. Having been informed that they would be very acceptable, President Roosevelt merely sent them to the library by messenger.

This was a notably quiet day at Sagamore Hill. No official callers had engagements with the President and the family had no house guests. Taking advantage of this fact and of the beautiful weather, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt went early in the day for a long horseback ride.

On his return the President and Secretary Loeb worked for two hours on an accumulation of correspondence and other official business. Letters and telegrams continue to pour in upon the President from all parts of the country, congratulating him upon the results of the State electoin in Vermont.

"CRISIS" IN THE TENDERLOIN.

Autos for Drunks Too Much for Jim the Doorman.

For some minutes there had been silence in the rear room of the Tenderloin—silence broken faintly and far-away by the muttering of a bibulous individual in the dungeon.

What was the use of acquiring a "jag" at $1.60, argued the bibulous one? What was the use, when the police said "the bubble cart weren't ready" to take him home. He would report the matter to Commissioner McAdoo and to Magistrate Pool, for the bibulous one had read all about it in the newspapers, all about the automobile that was to convey intoxication arrests to their homes, instead of to the cells.

"Xenodocius," said Jim the doorman, gravely, tilting his uniform cap to the thinking slant. The Classic Cop looked up from his study of Greek mythology.

"Things has came to a crisis!" said Jim, sadly.

Xenodocius maintained a classic silence.

"Firstly—put down that dime sensation, Xenny, an' listen!"

The Classic Cop closed the Greek mythology with a sigh.

"Firstly," said Jim, "Judge Pool ses the police shouldn't lock up tanks, but take 'em home in a bubble wagon. Do you s'pose f'r a minnit that any man inclined to the joy juice ain't goin' to hit it up wi' a salt herrin' mouth ef he knows he's goin' to be took home in a puff-go? If this rule goes through, I foresee, prophesy, and forecast a boom in the alcoholic ward.

"Besides," continued Jim, waxing eloquent, "this thing about takin' a souse home marked C. O. D. ain't consistent wi' human nature. Cells is a wise provision of nature for joy prostrations. It saves relatives the trouble o' puttin' 'em to bed. You show me the dootiful wife who'll pay bubble fare for the priv-lege o' tuckin' poor little Pa in his dinky cot, when he's got to go to court anyway.

"An' how are they goin' to reg'late fares? Is the oil perambulator o' the Nineteenth Precinct to pilot Harlem exuberance to its nest in the Thirty-second? Mebbe they'll start a transfer system. Gee! Think o' slumberin' your way home by easy stages to the Bronx. Things has came to a crisis, Xenodocius!"

After this outburst Jim the Doorman of the Tenderloin was silent for a while. The Classic Cop turned to mythology.

"Say," said Jim, after a while. "How'd I look in goggles?"

"Why?"

"Because it'll be up to me, or no job, to say 'De bubble waits, me lord,' and hoist 'em home."

BIG ROBBERY SIX WEEKS OLD.

Burglars Looted Brooklyn House—Police Didn't Know It.

The police of the Atlantic Avenue Station, Brooklyn, were feverishly and strenuously "at work" last night on a burglary which took place in the precinct only six weeks ago. As the cracksmen had a month and a half start of them, the ruling odds in local betting circles were something like 1,600 to 1 against the sleuths.

The residence of A. J. McCullum, at 920 St. Mark's Avenue, was the place robbed. Mr. McCullum and his family have been at their country home in Dutchess County, and their town house has been closed up. It was reopened with great éclat by the burglars around about the first of last month. The visitors entered the house in the most droll fashion—by boring a hole in the cellar wall. They first got into the next house, which was vacant, then broke through the wall in the cellar into Mr. McCullum's house. The burglars gathered together a lot of valuable bric-à-brac, rugs, clothing, cut oil paintings from their frames, and even ripped up several carpets from the floor. They got away with the bric-à-brac, but left the other things behind, apparently fearing that if they drove up to the house with three or four moving vans it might excite the suspicions of the police.

The robbery was discovered by a painter, who went into the vacant house adjoining to do some decorating. He found the cellar wall already decorated with a big hole, and reported his discovery to the police.

Two "plain clothes" men went around to the house, took measurements of the hole in the wall according to the Bertillon system, calculated the depth of the cellar below the sea level, carefully searched the painter to see if he had a piano, folding bed, or other evidence of guilt concealed about his person, and then went back to finish their wienerwurst and dark brew at a Summer garden.

Mr. McCullum estimated the value of the property stolen to be about $1,000.

LIVE ON FIRE ESCAPES, HE SAYS

Policeman Charges Prisoners with Eating and Sleeping There.

"They eat, live, and sleep on the fire-escapes," said Policeman Seip of the Madison Street Station, as he arraigned eight persons, charged with violating the law against blocking fire-escapes, in the Essex Market Court yesterday. Magistrate Ommen fined each of the offenders $5 and lectured them.

Mrs. Tillie Durnstryke of 156 Lewis Street, was the only prisoner who had a lawyer. Policeman Seip swore that he found eleven pillows, several blankets, bed-spreads, sheets, mattresses, and other impediments on the fire-escape balconies of her house, five hours after he had notified her to remove them. Her defense was that she was having her flat painted and put the things out there while the work was going on. The excuse did not avail, and Mrs. Durnstryke paid her $5 like the rest.

Magistrate Ommen issued warrants at the same time for other violators of the fire-escape law.

SAYS CAPTAIN MUST DODGE.

Magistrate Discharges Truck Driver Arrested by Sweeney.

As Capt. Sweeney of the Leonard Street Police Station was crossing West Broadway at Chambers Street yesterday he was almost run down by a truck driven by William O'Connor of 776 Henry Street. The Captain held up his hand for the driver to pull up, but the man kept on. Sweeney took the driver to the Tombs Court.

"Were you in uniform at the time, Captain?" Magistrate Pool asked.

"No, your Honor; but I think a plain citizen has rights in the street."

"Well," responded the Magistrate, "I guess we'll have to let the fellow go. When you are not in uniform I guess you'll have to dodge trucks as I do every time I cross a street."

Lamar House Bobs Up Again.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Bernard Smith of 225 West Fifty-seventh Street by Monroe L. Simon, a creditor, for $2,650 for money loaned. It was alleged that he is insolvent, and has transferred all his assets to a creditor to put them out of the reach of other creditors. Smith is said to be a brother-in-law of David Lamar, who obtained notoriety in the "Monk Eastman" case. The act of bankruptcy referred to in the petition is the transfer of the property at Sea Bright, on the Rumson Road, which was recently sold under foreclosure. This is the place where Lamar lived, and which is still in litigation. The property is said to really belong to Lamar.

Big Man-Eating Shark Dead.

The big nine-foot man-eating shark which for ten days has been the wonder of visitors to the Aquarium died yesterday morning just when his keepers thought he had fully recovered from the damage he did to himself previous to his capture off Sandy Hook. His body was lifted out of the tank by a derrick, loaded on a truck, and carried off to the Museum of Natural History, where the skin will be stuffed and placed on exhibition.

SUBWAY WILL NOT BE OPENED BEFORE OCT. 1

Engineer Parsons So Informs Rapid Transit Commission.

SAFETY DEVICES APPROVED

That the Interborough Rapid Transit Company has decided not to forego the amusement of a subway opening with plenty of fireworks became apparent at yesterday's meeting of the Rapid Transit Commission, when William Barclay Parsons, chief engineer, assured Mayor McClellan that there would be no regular operation of underground trains within thirty days unless something unexpected should transpire in the strike line.

The Aldermen, having notified Alexander E. Orr, President of the commission, that they wanted a month's notice ahead of the tunnel opening, Mr. Orr had written to August Belmont to ask for an exact date, and Mr. Belmont had answered that the last of September or the first week in October would find the road ready. When Mr. Belmont's letter was read, Mr. Orr asked Chief Engineer Parsons to tell the board how the tunnel was getting along. The latter said that all the operation appliances are installed, and that the road could be run, if necessary, in ten days, although it would take a month to have everything in ship-shape order. Mr. Parsons said that the only thing that would bring about an opening in less than thirty days would be "something extraordinary in the way of strikes."

For the first time the board heard an official report on the safety appliances of the subway. Deputy Chief Engineer George S. Rice, with the approval of Mr. Parsons, submitted an extensive technical statement on the electrical equipment. The safeguards described include the following:

The electric current operating signals is entirely separate from that used to propel trains.

On each signal post are duplicate lights, so that one electric lamp may burn out without crippling the service.

In addition to the two lights, which flash green for a clear track and red for danger, there is at the beginning of each block an automatic device that stops any train attempting to pass a red signal, and this stop is effected whether the motorman wishes it or not, or whether he is alive or dead.

Two trains are never traveling in contiguous blocks, for the signals do not clear until the train ahead has passed into the second block ahead, and so there is always an entire clear block between trains.

The blocks are not of regular lengths; for instance, the blocks on down grades are longer than those on up-hill stretches.

In every station there is an emergency control button, and in case of accident the station man can stop all power on all tracks, bringing all trains to a standstill, by pushing the button.

Along the tunnel, at intervals of about 200 feet between stations, are emergency boxes, from which any operative can put the tunnel service out of commission on all tracks in an instant.

The commission approved the report as submitted. An application from the One-Hundred-and-Sixteen Broadway Company, owners of the new Trinity Building, for permission to make a contract with the Interborough Company, which would bring a subway entrance into the building from the Rector Street station, was read, and the proposed contract was found to include the payment of $10,000 to the Interborough for maintenance.

"Is the Interborough to get revenue out of this?" asked Controller Grout.

Mr. Parsons assured him that the payment was purely for maintenance. At Mr. Orr's suggestion the application was laid on the table until previous entrance contracts could be looked up. Mr. Parsons, at his request, was authorized to spend $85 for printing certain pictures and drawings to give to 500 members of the Institute of Civil Engineers due here next Saturday from Europe. Mr. Parsons said he thought this courtesy ought to be extended to the representatives of so distinguished a society, and the board made no objection. The foreigners will be received by the Mayor on Tuesday, and then will inspect the subway on special trains. They are on their way to St. Louis.

SUBWAY TRAINS' FIRST VICTIM.

Division Superintendent Roeber Possibly Fatally Injured at 23d Street.

One of the Subway express trains which have been running since Sept. 1 for instruction purposes struck Superintendent Roeber of the Fourth Avenue Division of the line as is was slowing to make the Twenty-third Street up-town station at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning and hurled him nearly twenty feet on the south bound local track. Several of Superintendent Roeber's ribs and his nose were broken and his head cut and he was badly bruised. The doctors at Bellevue, where he was taken, said his chances of recovery were about even. Mr. Roeber is thirty years old and lives at 508 East One Hundred and Fifty-first Street.

AUTO HITS MILK WAGON.

Manhattan Man Injured and Milk Spilled All Around.

Samuel M. Stewart of 170 West Seventy-second Street, Manhattan, was injured early this morning in a collision between his automobile and a milk wagon driven by Samuel Lowery of 470 Pacific Avenue, Jersey City.

The accident occurred on Mercer Street, Jersey City. In the auto with Mr. Stewart was Mason Crocker. According to the occupants of the auto, the milk wagon was ahead of them, going west, when it turned suddenly to one side, and the auto smashed into it before it could be stopped. The milk wagon was wrecked and the milk liberally spilled around. The force of the collision threw both men out of the auto. Mr. Stewart struck on his side and his left shoulder and left leg were injured.

Lowery lays the blame for the accident on the occupants of the automobile. The machine, which is numbered 12,566, is being held in a livery stable here. It is much the worse for wear.

SHOULD TAKE AUTO OWNERS.

Arrest of Chauffeurs Does Little Good, Magistrate Cornell Says.

Owners of automobiles violating the speed limit should be arrested and not their chauffeurs, according to Magistrate Cornell. Louis Martini of 148 West Thirtieth Street, chauffeur for A. Hartuppe McKee of 50 East Fiftieth Street, arrested on Wednesday night, was before the Magistrate in the Yorkville Court yesterday. Policeman England charged that the machine was going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.

Mr. McKee gave bail for Martini's appearance yesterday, but when the prisoner was held in $300 bail for trial he went to jail in default of a bond.

"If the owners of these machines, who are generally very rich men and accustomed to a life of ease and luxury, were apprehended it would be very much better," said the Magistrate. "The law provides that if an automobile owner is caught twice in illegal speeding and is arrested a third time he may be imprisoned. Confinement upon prison fare would have a salutary effect upon such offenders. When the chauffeur is arrested his employer escapes with the mere small inconvenience of going to court to pay his fine, which is no real punishment.

"I don't believe in the shotgun treatment of reckless automobilists, but the owner of such a vehicle, if he be present when a policeman stops it for illegal speeding, should be arrested rather than the chauffeur."

MISS ROBSON'S LONDON HIT.

American Actress Scores Great Success with "Merely Mary Ann."

LONDON, Sept. 9, (Friday.)—Never in London has an American actress won greater or quicker success than that achieved by Miss Eleanor Robson last night in "Merely Mary Ann," at the Duke of York's Theatre.

Gallery and pit were none too friendly during the first act, and there were cries of "Louder!" and "Speak up!" But as the play progressed no dissenting voice was heard, and the applause, which came from all parts of the house, reached a climax at the end of the third act, when Miss Robson was recalled again and again.

Charles Frohman gave Miss Robson an excellent supporting company, including Gerald Du Maurier as Peter and Henry Ainley as Lancelot.

The audience included Israel Zangwill, the author of the play; Mr. and Mrs. Forbes Robertson, Sir A. Conan Doyle, W. S. Gilbert, Irene Vanbrugh, Marie Tempest, and a host of members of the theatrical profession.

All the morning newspapers bestow the highest praise on Eleanor Rboson, and admit that the success of the night was due more to Miss Robson than to Zangwill's play.

"Miss Robson won all our hearts," says The Daily Telegraph. "She is an artist and knows the effect she wants to produce and produces it unerringly and without effort. She came, she saw, she conquered from the first."

The other morning newspapers make similar criticisms, and remark the fact that without the customary advance notices and practically as an unknow débutante, she captured her audience.

The Daily Mail predicts that Miss Robson will become the idol of London playgoers.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

There will be the reception at Baltusrol this afternoon, which will conclude the National tournament. There will be a dance at the Meadow Club, Southampton, and hops at different suburban clubs. There are also a number of house parties at the seaside resorts.

***

Among the arrivals from Newport yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. James Gerard, James V. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. F. Martin Davies, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, and Mrs. James L. Kernochan.

IN THE SHOPS.

It is too late to be a June bride, but still people are marrying, though they miss that pretty honor forever. If a wedding present is desired for one of these September brides, there is one in hand-painted china, which is certainly reasonable enough in price and most attractive and useful. It is a cider jug, large, round, and squat, a comfortable, generous shape. It is decorated with corn, the ears with the husks flying on either side, suggesting the husking bee. The background is painted in a deep russet brown, which lightens almost to a pale yellow in front. The corn shows soft yellow and pale green tints. Altogether it is very charming and all for $10.

***

A tiny copper lustre cream jug, with a narrow neck, which makes it prettier to look at than to keep clean, is also hand painted and costs $1.75.

***

But in plain every day egg cups, though they are not really the plain every day kind at all, there are some real bargains. There are only three of these and they are 50 cents each. They are of the chinaest, finest china, decorated in barnyard designs, various residents of the hen coop. The designs on the various cups are different. One, the prettiest, shows a hen and two tiny chickens. Others are also good, if a trifle less interesting. The cups are on low standards and have scalloped edges. Possibly others to make out a set could be ordered at the same price. It is a chance for Christmas presents.

***

Hand-painted hat pins cost $1.25 and are done in rose designs, forget-me-nots. There are smaller pins, which are possibly a little lower in price.

***

There are little brooches, possibly they are intended for shirt waist pins, but they are really large for that, can be had, at a reduction, for 65 cents each, single rose designs, designs of two roses, some deep and others very pale pink. There are larger decorated pins or brooches that cost $1.25 and still larger ones for $1.50. All are selling at reduced prices.

***

And here are the prettiest things ever made into a hairpin cushion, which is usually about as ugly as anything for the dressing table well can be. They are little cut worsted balls, some made of pale blue and pink, others of pale green and pink, and these balls set in fluffy layers of silk to match, one of green or of blue and pink to match the centre. There is a loop to hang the cushion by and all this for only 50 cents. There is another style at 75 cents, this of green, set in a little pale green, silk-covered tub, with the fluffy silk beneath.

***

There is said to be only one left of these top collar cases. It is covered on the outside with linen, which is decorated with pink roses, hand painted. Inside, it is lined with pale pink silk, with ribbon straps and ribbons to tie with, and cost $2. These cases are really very useful for a variety of little collars and stocks and ties, which it is necessary to keep flat. This case is of generous size.

***

A veil case, with two fancy silk-covered boards, and a number of envelopes for the different veils between, is another pretty and useful thing, and which costs $2.25.

***

A gold pencil case, one of those flat ones with a cover, is intended for a man's use, is decorated with the entertaining bird and bottle, done in relief on the case, in this instance both small.

***

A plain cloth-covered postal card album costs $1.50 and will hold 100 cards. For a dollar more one holding 300 cards may be had.

***

A charming white negligée of one of those thin, hard-twisted woolens that will launder well, is trimmed around the deep collar, down the fronts, and the edges of the kimono sleeves with broad bands of pale yellow ribbon. The front corners of the collar are embroidered with a design of wheat in yellow and white.

***

New Fall shoes are coming out with toes which have almost needle points. Others more sensible are to be found, however.

Dr. Pryor Left All to Wife.

The will of Dr. William R. Pryor, who died recently at St. Vincent's Hospital, was filed for probate in the Surrogates' office yesterday. The petition accompanying the will gives the personal estate as less than $10,000, and states that there is no real estate. The testator bequeaths all of his property to his wife, Louise A. Pryor, whom he names as executrix. Judge Roger A. Pryor, the testator's father, was one of the witnesses to the will.

THE POPE SAYS FRANCE REMAINS DEAR TO HIM

Makes a Speech in Reply to Addresses by French Pilgrims.

STILL HOPES TO END QUARREL

Moderation of His Language Regarded as Showing That He Has Not Given Up Trying to Effect a Settlement.

ROME, Sept. 8.—The Pope to-day received 1,500 French pilgrims, mostly priests and nuns, led by M. Harmel, a well-known manufacturer, who delivered an address to the Pontiff.

Mgr. Germain, Archbishop of Toulouse, presented the homage of the French clergy.

His Holiness in reply said the reception was most important, being the first French pilgrimage to visit Rome since the conflict between France and the Vatican. Heretofore all pilgrimages had been postponed in order to avoid complications.

The Pope thanked the pilgrims for the loyalty and devotion they had manifested, not only in words but by deeds, thus risking having to make considerable sacrifices. He added:

"You, descendants of the sons of France who were unreservedly faithful to the Church, unreservedly devoted to the Chair of St. Peter, and always ready to defend and propagate truth and goodness, will not be degenerate heirs. In spite of the difficulties and sacrifices which, especially at the present time, you must face, be always generous minded, with the certain knowledge that you will thus be working not only for your own happiness, but for the prosperity of your country."

After reviewing the historic connection between France and the Vatican the Pontiff said:

"France is always, notwithstanding all that has happened, most dear to our heart. If necessary we are ready to endure again sufferings to insure the welfare and greatness of your country."

The Pope concluded by urging the pilgrims to remain firmly attached to the Church and to strive for true prosperity.

The Swiss band played the hymn to Joan of Arc, which also was sung by the pilgrims to-night at a banquet given in the Belvedere Court of the Vatican in their honor. Cardinal Martinelli was among those present.

The moderation of the Pope's discourse was much commented upon. It was compared with the aggressive tone of the recent speech made by the French Premier, M. Combes, at Auxerre, and was considered to be an indication that the Vatican has not yet lost hope that some understanding may be arrived at with France, which is also proved by the fact that, although the Papal Nuncio at Paris has been recalled, his position is still there, occupying a semi-official position.

HOW MUCH IS A HAIR CUT?

Dispute Whether It Includes Shampoo Lands Two in Police Station.

Abraham Gossett's father contributed 15 cents yesterday that his son might get a haircut. Accordingly Abraham, who is seventeen years old, visited the shop of Peter Happ at 79 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and told the proprietor to go ahead.

Happ administered the haircut and then added a singe. A shampoo was, of course, necessary to remove the effects of the singe, and likewise a quantity of perfume to counteract the effect of the shampoo. Then Happ passed out a check for 75 cents.

"But pop only gave me 15 cents," faltered Abraham.

Happ demanded either 75 cents or other valuable consideration so forcibly that the lad left a gold locket at the shop for security and went back to his home at 2,084 Fifth Avenue for more money. He told his father that the singe, shampoo, and perfume had been administered without orders. So Gossett senior went over to the barber's shop to hand it back.

What happened was so noisy that Policeman "Ajax" Whitman appeared and arrested Happ and young Abraham. At the station the Sergeant avoided the issue by booking them both on a charge of disorderly conduct.

BIG ARBUCKLE FREIGHT DEPOT.

Sugar Man Plans General Terminal for Central Part of Brooklyn.

It was announced in Brooklyn yesterday that John Arbuckle, of the firm of Arbuckle Brothers, was planning to build a big freight terminal at Jay and Bridge Streets and the East River, adjoining the Arbuckle sugar refineries. It is intended to use the depot for the handling of freight for the central portion of Brooklyn. Mr. Arbuckle has acquired from the Poillon estate a piece of property having a frontage of 700 feet on the river and a depth of 900 feet. This, with his other holdings, gives him control of nearly two blocks of water front property.

It is expected that about $1,600,000 will be expended on the terminal. Several large piers and three immense warehouses, each seven stories in height, will be built. Loaded freight cars will be hauled from the boats into the buildings and by means of powerful elevators lifted to the upper floors, where they will be shoved about on tracks to desired positions for unloading. The buildings will be constructed to carry enormous floor weights and each floor will be practically a railroad yard in itself. It is expected that the new terminal will be ready to handle freight in a few months.

HOTEL ENDICOTT FIRE SCARE.

Crowd Collected While Boy Drenched Blazing Awning.

Somebody threw a cigarette or cigar from an upper window of the Hotel Endicott, at Eighty-first Street and Columbus Avenue, last night and it landed on the awning of a second floor window setting it afire. Some women in the reception room smelled the smoke and got excited. They ran into the street but refrained, while a crowd collected and people ran up on the elevated road platform. A motorman saw the scene and pulled his whistle for the fire alarm signal.

The firemen hurried around to the hotel, but an elevator boy had thrown a pail of water on the awning and put out the blaze with no further damage.

GEOGRAPHERS IN CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—In the presence of distinguished geographers of this and foreign countries, the first session of the eighth International Geographical Congress was called to order at 10 o'clock this morning in the Auditorium of the George Washington University by Commander R. E. Peary, United States Navy, President of the congress. Dr. Charles D. Walcott, Director of the Geological Survey, welcomed the congress to America on behalf of President Roosevelt, and announced Mr. Roosevelt's acceptance of the honorary Presidency of the congress.

Commander Peary, in his address, outlined the progress of geography since the last congress, and presented some of the more important problems yet to be solved. His allusions to the polar expedition work were of especial interest to the delegates, as he is to head an expedition to the north pole next year. In concluding his address, Commander Peary said:

"I wish to express our obligations to his Excellency President Roosevelt, that splendid, vigorous, typical American who stands at our head to-day; the fearless, unhesitating man of magnificently wedded thought and action, who has graciously consented to head the congress; to Baron Richtofen and his colleagues of the Executive Committee of the Seventh International Geographical Congress for the way in which they have carried out the work intrusted to them by that congress; to our distinguished foreign visitors and friends, who have devoted so much time and effort to be present; to those who, prevented by circumstances from being present in person, have sent us most valuable papers; to Prof. McGee and his colleagues of the Committee of Arrangements, and to Prof. Davis and his colleagues of the Committee of Scientific Programme, for their tireless efforts on behalf of this congress."

THE REV. DR. LORIMER DEAD.

Was Pastor of Madison Avenue Baptist Church Here—Died Abroad.

BOSTON, Sept. 8.—Private messages received in this city to-day from Aix les Bains, France, announced the death of the Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, formerly pastor of Tremont Temple here. The cause of death was not indicated, but it is known that Dr. Lorimer had been in ill-health for some time.

Dr. Lorimer had been pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, in this city, for almost three years, having resigned the pastorate of Tremont Temple, Boston, to accept the call. He was only secured after the hardest kind of a fight for his services, as the Boston church was loath to part with him, and at first declined to accept his resignation.

Dr. Lorimer had been twice pastor of Tremont Temple, having served twenty-one years there in all, and was dearly beloved by his people. His duties were heavier than he could bear, however, and finally he sent in his letter of resignation in October, 1901, saying that he wished to be relieved from the physical burden of ministering to a church with 3,000 members, and came to New York, where he thought he could do good.

Dr. Lorimer was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1838, and came to the United States in 1859. When he came to this country he determined to study for the ministry, and was ordained at Georgetown College, Kentucky, in 1859. He was pastor successively of churches at Harrodsburg, Paducah, and Louisville, Ky.; Boston and Chicago. After his term of service in Chicago he returned to Boston, where he remained until he came to New York.

He was prominent as an author. Among his best-known works were "Isms, Old and New," "The Great Conflict," "Jesus, the World's Saviour," "Studies in Social Life," "Christianity and the Social State," "Messages for To-day to the Men of To-morrow," and "The Master of Millions."

Dr. Lorimer had been in poor health for some time. In February he was compelled to relinquish his pastoral duties temporarily, and several months ago he determined upon a European trip in the hope that he could regain his strength abroad. He leaves a wife and several children. At the apartment house where he lived in New York residence, 163 West Fifty-eighth Street, it was said last night that his wife and one of his sons sailed about a week ago to join him abroad.

FAMOUS OLD ACTRESS DEAD.

Played in the Comedy Lincoln Was Witnessing When Assassinated.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 8.—Mrs. Sara Stevens, a member of the "Way Down East" Company, playing here, died suddenly at the city hospital to-day of uraemia.

Mrs. Stevens was seventy years of age, and her stage career, which was a notable one, dated from Oct. 27, 1856.

She was a member of the Laura Keene Company that presented "Our American Cousin," the comedy Lincoln was witnessing when assassinated at Ford's Theatre in Washington.

Mrs. Stevens was the widow of John C. Heénan, the noted pugilist. After her marriage she retired for fourteen years. On the death of her husband she returned to the American stage. Mrs. Stevens's home was in Oakland, Cal., but messages sent to relatives there failed to reach them.

Obituary Notes.

Mrs. REBECCA RUTER SPRINGER, widow of Congressman William M. Springer, died yesterday at Oaklawn Sanitarium, in Jacksonville, Ill.

CHARLES D. ROBT, whose home was in Philadelphia, and who represented the New York house of Bliss, Fabyan & Co., died suddenly yesterday of apoplexy at the Hotel Belvidere in Baltimore.

ROBERT BONYNGE, sixty-five years old, for more than thirty years a stenographer in the Supreme Court, died on Wednesday at his home, 146 West One Hundred and Twenty-second Street. He was admitted to the bar many years ago, and opened an office on Broadway, but he remained in the position of court stenographer until the time of his death. Mr. Bonynge was prominently known in Masonic circles in this city.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—During the past twenty-four hours there have been local showers in the lower lake region, Middle Atlantic States, New England, and along the South Atlantic and Gulf Coast. Elsewhere the weather was generally clear. There will be local showers to-morrow morning in the Middle Atlantic States and New England, followed by fair weather during the day. On the New England coast the winds will be light to fresh northeast and on the Middle Atlantic Coast light and variable.

Steamships departing to-morrow for European ports will have light to fresh northeast to east winds, with occasional showers, to the Grand Banks.

Griffith's Men Defeated Quakers Twice —Two Victories for Brooklyn Over Boston.

After winning twelve straight games the New York National League team was defeated in the first contest of a double-header yesterday, and it was the Philadelphians who checked McGraw's men after equaling the record of the Baltimore Club of eighteen consecutive victories. Brooklyn had two games with Boston, and the latter made but one run in both. At Philadelphia the Greater New Yorks were twice successful over "Connie" Mack's powerful team, and Boston likewise made a clean sweep at Washington. Summary follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Lose One Game with Taylor and Elliotte Pitching.

In the two games with the Philadelphia team at the Polo Grounds yesterday the New Yorks finished even, and they were compelled to work hard to do that. In the first game, which was won by the visitors by a score of 9 to 8, Taylor was pitted against Duggleby, and the latter had much the better of the pitching for six innings. Taylor was not only hit hard, but was very wild, and after the sixth inning he was relieved by Elliotte. It was the second time that the ex-Cincinnatian had appeared in the box in a championship game since joining the New Yorks, and for two innings he did well. Then the Philadelphians gauged his delivery and in the last inning scored two earned runs, which won the game. Duggleby kept the New York players in check until the seventh inning, when he was hit unmercifully, and had to retire when the inning was two-thirds over. Corridon took his place, but a base on balls and a fumble by Donohue proved disastrous.

A base on balls, Gleason's single, and McGee's terrific hit to centre field for four bases gave the Quakers three runs in the third inning, and two bases on balls, Dahlen's fumble, and Titus's three-base hit added four runs in the fifth. The New Yorks scored five runs in the seventh inning, four of which were earned, on a base on balls, Bresnahan's home run, Donlin's double, and three singles. They took the lead in the next inning on a base on balls, Browne's bunt, Donohue's fumble, and Dahlen's three-bagger to left field. After the visitors had scored two runs in the ninth the New Yorks had three men on bases, Marshall batting in place of Elliotte. Browne received the first chance to score a runner, but he swung at the ball instead of bunting and was retired. McGann failed to give any relief, and the three men were left.

Only six and a half innings were played of the second game, owing to darkness. With Mathewson pitching, the New Yorks batted vigorously and fielded finely—in fact, Doolin's wild throw to third to catch Gilbert, which allowed two men to score, was the only error of the contest. Sparks was steady enough, but his delivery seemed to suit the local men. The Philadelphians' only run was the result of Sparks's two-base hit, Thomas's sharp ball to Dahlen, a steal of second, and Gleason's out at first base. The scores:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Chesbro and Orth Pitch in Two Winning Games for New York.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—Two well-contested and interesting games were the result of the meeting of the Greater New York and Philadelphia teams to-day, and the local players were defeated in both. The New Yorks played a superb fielding game throughout, and this in conjunction with the skillful pitching of Chesbro and Orth resulted in the Athletic's downfall. "Happy Jack" has a host of admirers in this city who believe in his invincibility, and the fact that he and Waddell were to be opposed to each other, attracted over 12,000 persons to the grounds. The two noted pitchers officated in the first game, which the New Yorks won by three to two. Dougherty and Keeler made all the runs for their team, and they hit safely twice out of four times at the bat. Davis and Murphy were the only local men who hit Chesbro with effect. The latter was conspicuous in fielding, but the star performance in this respect were Ganzel's first-base playing, Schreck's catching, and Anderson's exhibition in centre field.

In the second game the visitors hit vigorously, but Orth kept the Philadelphia's record down to seven hits. For five innings it was anybody's game. Bender's wildness and Williams's safe hit gave the New Yorks a run in the first inning, and Philadelphia tied the score on Bender's hard hit for two bases and Hartsel's safety to left field. In the eighth Keeler, the first batsman, hit for three bases, and Anderson's powerful drive to short stop, scored the little right fielder. Good batting and a base on balls gave the New Yorks three runs in the ninth, while the Philadelphias were put out in one, two, three order. The scores:

CLEVELAND AND CHICAGO WIN.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept. 8.—Cleveland and Chicago broke even to-day. In the first game Chicago could not hit Joss, while Cleveland bunched its hits with Chicago's errors. In the second game Chicago did not get a man to first until the sixth inning, and did not make a hit until the seventh. Errors by Hess and Lush, with scratch hits by Jones, Callahan, and Sullivan, gave Chicago three runs in the ninth, winning the game. Scores:

Domestic Potters Win a Victory Over the Importers.

Borgfeldt & Co.'s Holland Ware Advanced 10 Per Cent. in Value—Gen. Sharretts's Decision Reversed.

A signal victory was won yesterday by the domestic potters, when Sub-Board No. 2 of the United States General Appraisers sustained the advance of 10 per cent. made by Appraiser Whitehead on crockery from Holland imported by George Borgfeldt & Co. In doing so this sub-board, which consists of General Appraisers Fischer, Howell, and De Vries, reversed the decision of Gen. T. S. Sharretts, who on the first appeal sustained Borgfeldt & Co.'s invoice values.

The goods on which the advance is made are chiefly cups and saucers of the cheaper grades, made in the Maestricht district of Holland. Until Borgfeldt & Co. began to import them a little more than a year ago, the domestic manufacturers controlled the market on this class of goods. When they began to feel the competition of Borgfeldt & Co.'s goods they started an investigation, which resulted in charges of undervaluation being presented to the Treasury Department. Borgfeldt & Co. presented evidence to Gen. Sharretts which convinced him that their invoice values were correct. Mr. Burgess, Secretary of the American Produce Association, however, produced additional evidence before the sub-board, which overturned Gen. Sharretts's decision.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

HARVEY C. FIELDER.—Schedules in the assignment of Harvey C. Fielder, who did business as Fielder & Co., dealers in carriages at 35 West Forty-third Street, show liabilities of $12,983, nominal assets of $2,616, and actual assets of $841.

EMIL WOLTMANN.—Emil Woltmann has confessed judgment for $8,942 in favor of the Louisville Banking Company on a note made on March 23, 1891, by the firm of Woltmann, Keith & Co., of which he was a member, given for cash loaned by the company in discounting a note given to Roberts & Co. of Anniston, Ala.

ABRAHAM WEISS.—Abraham Weiss, a dealer in crockery, at 23 Hester Street, confessed judgment yesterday for $4,121 in favor of Myer Taub on five notes, and execution was issued to Deputy Sheriff Forges, who levied on the stock in the store. He has been in business since 1885, and for several years had two stores, but gave one of them up two years ago.

JOSEPH AND HENRY SIEGEL.—Deputy Sheriff Forges has received a writ of replevin against Joseph and Henry Siegel, fur manufacturers at 59 Bleecker Street, for $569 in favor of Barnet Cohn for 814 fur skins. The Sheriff found a bag of skins called for on the writ and sent the bag to a storage warehouse. They have been in business about five years, and were depositors in the Federal Bank.

SWAN ELECTRIC MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—Judge Blanchard of the Supreme Court has appointed Theodore C. Wallace receiver for the Swan Electric Manufacturing Company, formerly of 55 William Street, on the application of William J. Wilson, who obtained a judgment against the company for $15,190 on March 17. The receiver's bond is $2,500, and the assets consist of some patents and a few outstanding accounts.

Out of Town.

WORCESTER, Mass.—W. A. Worden, a real estate dealer, has filed a petition in bankruptcy; liabilities, $63,550; assets, $6,190.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.—The real estate and personal property of the White Mountain Paper Company were sold at public auction under foreclosure proceedings here yesterday and purchased by James E. Burnett of New York, representing a Reorganization Committee. Mr. Burnett, who was the only bidder, paid $2,500,000 for the real estate and $150,000 for the personal property.

DETROIT, Mich.—A petition to have the Detroit Sulphite Fibre Company adjudged bankrupt has been filed in the United States Court by creditors holding claims amounting to $111,365. Four months ago the Detroit Trust Company and J. H. McCormick of New York were appointed joint receivers for the company. The petitioners allege that this appointment was an ex parte matter and void.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

SCHOENFELD & GORDON.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Schoenfeld & Gordon, cloak manufacturers, of 123 Bleecker Street, show liabilities of $18,172 and nominal assets of $6,118, consisting of stock, $4,000; machines, $500; accounts, $118, and equity in assigned accounts, $1,500.

NEW YORK AND LIMA OIL COMPANY.—Judge Thomas of the United States District Court has appointed Marshall S. Hagar receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of the New York and Lima Oil Company, which consist of oil lands, wells, derricks, oil in tanks in Ohio, and money due it by the Standard Oil Company for oil purchased by the latter company.

COHEN & WEINSTEIN.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Albert Stickney, Jr., receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of Cohen & Weinstein, cloak manufacturers at 35 East Eighth Street, against whom a petition in bankruptcy was filed on Sept. 2. It was stated that the place was burned out in August, and there is due $1,000 insurance from two companies, and there are about $500 in outstanding accounts.

MORRIS COHEN.—Morris Cohen, manufacturer of cloaks at 165 and 167 Greene Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $14,805 and assets $2,654, consisting of stock $875, machinery $1,500, and accounts $279. Among the creditors are the State Bank $500, Hudson Woolen Company $1,110, Manhattan Woolen Company $828, and Boessneck, Brossel & Co., $461. He has been in business eleven years.

WILLIAM JACOBUS.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Joseph H. Choate, Jr., receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of William Jacobus, wholesale dealer in old metals at 250 Water Street, and fixed his bond at $1,500. It was stated that Mr. Jacobus has been absent from his place of business for a week and left a boy in charge of the premises, which is a four-story building. There are about 100 barrels of old metals in the place, valued at $1,500; some metal cutters, office furnishings, &c., estimated at $1,000.

MAURICE J. KARP.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Maurice J. Karp, dealer in linoleum, carpets, &c., at 196 Madison Street, by two creditors, the National Carpet Manufacturing Company $384 and the New York Linoleum and Floor Covering Company $1,300. It is alleged that he is insolvent, has removed a large part of his property, and transferred merchandise and accounts $1,500. He was formerly in business at 1135 Lexington Avenue and moved to this city in January, 1903. In April last he claimed to have a capital of $6,000.

T. HILL LEARY.—Schedules in bankruptcy of T. Hill Leary of T. H. Leary & Co., stock brokers, of 41 Wall Street, show liabilities of $55,735 and nominal assets of $12,267, consisting of cash, $1,526; stocks turned over to the receiver, $5,000; outstanding accounts, $4,441, and a seat on the Consolidated Exchange, $1,300. Among the creditors are Jay C. Wemple of Schenectady, N. Y., $9,176; Charles A. Bailey of Van Rensselaer, N. Y., $5,500; M. Kanause, Dover, N. J., $2,432; Hopkins Brothers, $1,100; E. L. Erbeck, White Plains, $3,128; J. J. Brown, White Plains, $1,511; M. J. Wood, Philadelphia, $1,075, and Dr. W. E. Woodend, $300.

LEVI & KLAUBER.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Benjamin Levi and Samuel Klauber, who compose the firm of Levi & Klauber, wholesale dealers in dress goods at 27 Lispenard Street, by two creditors—the Given Manufacturing Company $53, and Fred Butterfield & Co. $316. It was alleged that they are insolvent, have made payments of $5,000 to creditors, have transferred merchandise and accounts $5,000, and removed a large part of their property. They began business in February, 1901, with a claimed capital of $7,000, both having been previously employed by a house in this line. In October last they claimed to have assets of $32,900 and liabilities $7,700.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly made and entered in the above entitled action, and bearing date the 11th day of July, 1904, I, the undersigned, the referee named in said judgment, will sell at public auction, at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 161 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 4th day of October, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Joseph P. Day, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, with the building or improvements thereon, situate, lying and being on the southerly side of Ninth Street, in the City of New York, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the northerly line of Ninth Street, two hundred (200) feet westerly from the northwest corner of Forty-eighth Street and Ninth Avenue; running thence northwardly parallel with Ninth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches; thence westwardly parallel to Forty-eighth Street, eighty (80) feet; thence southwardly and parallel to Ninth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches to the northerly line of Ninth Street; thence eastwardly along the northerly line of Ninth Street eighty (80) feet to the point or place of beginning, be said several dimensions and distances more or less.

Dated New York, September 1st, 1904.

The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $40,091.33, with interest thereon from the 22d day of August, 1904, together with costs and allowances amounting to $311.07, with interest thereon from the 29th day of August, 1904, together with the expenses of sale; the approximate amount of taxes, assessments or liens, which are to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money, or paid by the referee, is $1,076 and interest.

The premises will be sold subject to a first mortgage for $100,000, with the interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from January 1st, 1904, accrued and to accrue up to the time of the delivery of the referee's deed, and to any foreclosure thereof that may be instituted, with the costs; subject also to the restrictive covenants contained in the instrument recorded in Liber 900, Conveyances, Page 278, in the office of the Register of the County of New York affecting the westerly five feet only of the mortgaged premises, and also to the party-wall agreements between the said premises and the premises adjoining on the west to the extent of about ten inches on the mortgaged premises; to all encroachments by the southerly wall of the building and shed on the premises adjoining on the north to the extent of about ten inches on the mortgaged premises; to the party-wall between the said premises and the premises adjoining on the north; to the projection over the mortgaged premises of the window sills of the building on the premises adjoining on the north; all as shown by survey made by George C. Hollerith, dated January 23d, 1896.

PUBLIC NOTICES.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS.

Department of Finance, Bureau for the Collection of Taxes, New York, September 1, 1904.

TAXPAYERS WHO DESIRE TO OBTAIN their bills promptly should make immediate written requisition. Bills may be procured in the Borough offices,) stating their property by Section or Ward, Block and Lot or Map number, making one of same from their bills of last year.

If a taxpayer is assessed for personal tax, the requisition should also request bill for such tax.

Each requisition should be accompanied by an envelope bearing the proper address of the applicant, AND WITH RETURN POSTAGE PREPAID.

In case of any doubt in regard to Ward, Section, Block or Lot number, taxpayers should take their deeds to the Department of Taxes and Assessments and have their property located on the maps of that Department and forward to the Deputy Receiver of Taxes with the requisition a certified memorandum of their property, which will be furnished by the Department of Taxes and Assessments.

Taxpayers in this manner will receive their bills returned by mail at the earliest possible moment and avoid any delay caused by calling on lines, as required in case of personal application.

JACOB S. VAN WYCK, Municipal Building, Borough of Brooklyn, New York.

After receiving the bills, the taxpayer will see that they are properly rebated, then draw check for the net amount to the order of the Receiver of Taxes and mail bill and check, with an addressed envelope, with the return postage prepaid, to the Deputy Receiver in whichever borough the property is located.

Checks should be mailed as soon as possible after the bills have been received by the taxpayer.

DAVID E. AUSTEN, Receiver of Taxes.

Personal property of foreign corporations doing business in New York is taxable when kept within New York.

By the laws of New York both lineal and collateral inheritance taxes are imposed, not only on the estates of residents, but also on the personal estate of non-residents found in New York. No such laws exist in New Jersey.

It is therefore evident that it is of great advantage both to individuals and corporations to have Safe Deposit accommodations and Bank Accounts in New Jersey.

Buying Overpowers Profit Taking—Almost a Million Shares Done and the Rise Continues.

There was curiously little change in yesterday's stock market. There was the same pressure to take profits, the same easy absorption, but even a better record of price changes. No less than thirty-three descriptions sold at the year's highest, and the declines were so few as to carry no significance. For example, Northwest was the only representative property to fall over a point, and there is something humorous about a decline in Northwest as a sop to the bears. When more volatile and less valuable properties were rising, the bears were wont to point to Northwest's backwardness as a proof that the buyers were of the sort and capacity for discrimination that prefer yellow diamonds because they are cheap to pure stones sold with a guarantee of return of the price. A decline in Northwest as a proof of weakness in the list and exaggerated idea of values fails of conviction.

An examination of the rises affords more scope for moralizing. More than two points added to Reading (both descriptions) seems like another inch on the end of a man's nose, when its rise is compared with the decrease of anthracite production in August and the year. As the steel trade war waxes hot Steel Corporation shares strengthen, of course, and the curious thing is that there is no more stock for sale at the higher prices than at the lower. The dealings are larger than some weeks ago, but those who know how to judge the market say that the stocks available for speculation do not increase in volume, indicating a scarcity very interesting to those who still have to buy the goods they have sold in a rising market. The activity in Rock Island is no local surprise, but arbitragers who knew how the activity in London was engineered from here could but smile as the fervid telegrams from London found place on the news slips. A better explanation than the London demand is a surmise in some quarters that the alleged disappointed buyers of Alton might seek consolation in this quarter. Eries were strong, of course, and the strength of the soft coalers was as marked as in the hard coal division. Baltimore and Ohio gave signs that it would soon sympathize with Pennsylvania, as it logically should, and the companies which consume steel and iron rose with better reason than those which produce and sell it in a declining market.

There was singularly little news. The corn crop scare did not arrive, but it is a trifle overdue, and may be counted upon. Early news of the wheat scare would have ruined anybody who had acted according to its logical indications. Money was a trifle cheaper, Wednesday's quotable rise having impressed nobody. With weakening sterling, and a London reserve almost as swollen as our own, the money market will respond sluggishly to its scares, such as, for instance, yesterday's report that Russia was taking Paris gold to St. Petersburg. On any large scale that would be reflected here almost as quickly as in London, but no attention was paid yesterday.

GENERAL BUSINESS ITEMS.

Coal shipments over Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburg and Erie for week ended Sept. 3, it is stated, were 834,560 tons, making the total for the year to date 26,528,773 tons, against 28,604,183 tons last year.

***

The tonnage of boats passing the Sault Ste. Marie Canal during August was 4,194,586 tons, the largest total in the history of that waterway.

***

The preliminary figures of anthracite coal production for August show a decrease of 291,373 tons, as compared with the preceding month, when the shipments were 4,623,227 tons.

Crescent Shipyards Bought In.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 8.—Receiver James Smith, Jr., as special master, to-day sold the real and personal property of the Crescent Shipbuilding Company for $150,000. The real property was sold for $125,000, and the personal $25,000. He also sold the Moore plant for $205,000, the real property bringing $175,000, and the personal went for $30,000. William Nelson Cromwell, who represented the Reorganization Committee, was the purchaser of both plants.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Big Market Offers Little Comfort to the Bears—Expert Reports on Corn.

If there are any bears who can find comfort in yesterday's market, they are welcome to it. With transactions approaching the 1,000,000-share mark and with considerable "distribution" of stocks, the market closed strong and active, apparently willing and ready to take all the stock that was coming to it. During the midday hours there were slight reactions accompanied by dullness, but after 2 o'clock the market advanced again, closing very near the top. Yesterday was the third day that transactions have exceeded 750,000 shares, and the tendency has been broadening all the time. The total sales yesterday were the biggest for many months.

That Corn Crop Scare.

Not even a pessimistic dispatch from Snow on the corn crop prospects affected prices to any extent. This crop expert wired from Iowa that he had been all over the State, and that corn was sappy, the ear full of water, and that only warm weather for another four weeks would dry it out. Earlier frost would make a small crop. But the last sentence contained the sting: "Last year the first frost came on Sept. 16." Other bear ammunition may be expected to follow this first skirmish fire, but it seems doubtful now if the market will pay much attention to them.

Strength of Reading.

Reading again led the market in point of activity. There were dealt in 163,940 shares of the common, or nearly one-fourth of the entire issue. The stock rose 2½ points, and there was nothing even suggested to explain the advance, except the report from Philadelphia to the effect that H. C. Frick had bought and taken out of the market 25,000 shares.

***

Southern Railway Up.

Southern Railway common rose 1½ points on sales of 106,325 shares. The buying was said to be for the account of a quartet of millionaires who, while at supper Wednesday evening, picked that stock as one that could be easily put up, for the earnings of the road are good and the prospects are supposed to be even better.

Other Active Issues.

United States Steel, Erie, and Rock Island were the other most active issues. Steel rose early, as it always does these days, when a cut in some of its products is announced. The old story about the early bird holds true in Steel, the worm being the short element, which is still quite extensive, but which twists uneasily every time there is a sharp advance. Erie was tipped for a rise, but Rock Island rather surprised by its strength. The wise ones are talking of big developments in that property.

Metropolitan Again Consolidated.

During the last hour the rumor was spread about that a circular on Metropolitan had been sent out. By some unsophisticated persons this was taken to mean that the grand consolidation had at last been officially announced. If the circular should turn out to have been another call on the Metropolitan Securities subscribers, the Street would not be inclined to doubt.

AMERICAN COTTON RECEIVERS.

Men Named in New Jersey Also Appointed in This State.

Judge E. Henry Lacombe in the United States Circuit Court yesterday appointed for the New York district Charles E. Kimball of Summit, N. J., and W. C. Lovering of Taunton, Mass., receivers for the American Cotton Company. The New Jersey courts, when the company first got into trouble several months ago, appointed the same receivers.

The American Cotton Company was organized with a capital of $6,000,000, later increased to $7,000,000, to exploit the "round top bale" and deal in cotton generally. Its difficulties are attributed to a lack of sufficient capital. The company has branch offices at Havre, Bremen, and Antwerp. Nearly $2,000,000 of liabilities will accrue next month and the papers filed say the company is without funds to meet them.

STOCK EXCHANGE LISTINGS.

Consolidated Gas Company, $12,632,500 convertible 6 per cent. debenture bonds of 1909, with $7,178,500 additional to be placed on the list from time to time as issued, making a total amount authorized of $20,000,000.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, $5,000,000 additional refunding convertible 4 per cent. bonds of 2002, making a total of $10,000,000.

St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company, $1,144,000 additional 4 per cent. refunding mortgage bonds of 1951, making a total of $60,141,000.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—Money was in steady demand in the market to-day and discounts were weak.

Trading on the Stock Exchange opened dull and irregular, remained quiet and hesitating, while awaiting confirmation of the rumor that Russia was withdrawing gold from the Bank of France, and closed with a better tone, the possible effect of such withdrawal appearing to have been exaggerated.

Consols and home rails were easy, but recovered at the close.

Americans opened dull and grew firmer later. United States Steel was the feature. Prices closed below the best quotations of the day.

Japanese had a sagging tendency. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 96½. Closing prices:

Consols for money, 85⅝; consols for account, 88⅝; Anaconda, 4⅛; Atchison, 84½; Atchison preferred, 101; Baltimore and Ohio, 91½; Canadian Pacific, 129⅝; Chesapeake and Ohio, 42⅝; Chicago Great Western, 18½; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 161¼; De Beers, 18⅝; Denver and Rio Grande, 26⅝; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 81; Erie, 30⅝; Erie first preferred, 68½; Erie second preferred, 45; Illinois Central, 143; Louisville and Nashville, 120; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 23⅜; New York Central, 121; Norfolk and Western, 70¼; Norfolk and Western preferred, 92; Ontario and Western, 34⅜; Pennsylvania, 65; Rand Mines, 10⅛; Reading, 33⅜; Reading first preferred, 43¾; Reading second preferred, 38½; Southern Railway, 31⅛; Southern Railway preferred, 97½; Southern Pacific, 59½; Union Pacific, 108⅛; Union Pacific preferred, 96; United States Steel, 14½; United States Steel preferred, 85½; Wabash, 21¼; Wabash preferred, 42; Spanish 4s, 87¼.

Money, 1¼@1¾ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2¼@2⅜ per cent.; three months' bills, 2 9-16@2⅝ per cent.

Bullion to the amount of £44,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day; £30,000 was withdrawn for shipment to South America.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—On the Bourse to-day a denial of the rumor that Russia was withdrawing part of the funds of the last French loan relieved the market. Trading, however, was inactive, though prices were firm, particularly rentes. Russian imperial 4s were quoted at 93.25 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 507.

The private rate of discount was 1½@1¾ per cent.

BERLIN, Sept. 8.—Trading was very light on the Boerse here to-day. Baltimore and Ohio and Canadian Pacific were weaker.

Discount rates: Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 2⅞ per cent.

PHILADELPHIA TRANSACTIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—There was strength and activity to this market to-day that was surprising, and it was convincing proof too that the public was in the market to a greater extent than had been thought. The greater part of the dealings, it is true, were in the arbitrage stocks, but there were other issues that showed activity far beyond any recorded for many months. The list included Cambria Steel, Philadelphia Electric, Philadelphia Company, Philadelphia Rapid Transit, and United Gas Improvement. This group was very strong, especially the last named, which advanced 2½ points. A Street report had it that certain interests had been caught short of the stock and were forced to cover. The buying of Rapid Transit was attributed to the election of George H. Earle to the Directory, while the movement in Philadelphia Company appeared to be a continuance of the one started some time ago. Northern Central was a strong feature, while Philadelphia Traction advanced to the highest price quoted for it in many months. Union Traction advanced ⅝ to 53¾, its highest recorded price. Total sales, 64,332 shares; $74,200 bonds.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

A broadening tendency developed in the trading in unlisted securities yesterday, accompanied by strength during a part of the session, but the close showed reactions from the best figures of the day. Greater interest was taken in the bond list, which displayed considerable activity. Seaboards were quiet and we

REFEREES' NOTICES.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, NEW YORK County.—MEYER D. ROTHSCHILD, plaintiff, against MICHAEL J. COFFEY and others as executors of and trustees of the trust created by the last will and testament of John Keenan, deceased, et al., defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly made and entered in the above-entitled action and dated September 7th, 1904, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the New York Real Estate Salesrooms, No. 161 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 5th day of October, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon on that day by Joseph P. Day, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold and therein described as follows:

All that lot of land in New York City with the buildings thereon, bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the northerly side of Eighty-second Street, distant two hundred and three feet four inches westerly from the intersection of the northerly side of Eighty-second Street and the westerly side of Second Avenue, and running thence northerly parallel with Second Avenue one hundred and two feet two inches to the middle line of the block between Eighty-second and Eighty-third Streets, thence westerly along said line twenty-five feet five inches; thence southerly parallel with Second Avenue and part of the way through a party wall one hundred and two feet two inches to the northerly side of Eighty-second Street, and thence easterly along the northerly side of Eighty-second Street twenty-five feet five inches to the point of beginning. Said premises being now known as Number Two hundred and thirty-one East Eighty-second Street.

ABRAHAM BENEDICT, Referee. Dated New York, September 8th, 1904. BOUDINOT KEITH, Attorney for Plaintiff, 45 Cedar Street, New York City.

The following is a diagram of the property to be sold as described above, the street number being Two hundred and thirty-one East Eighty-second Street:

The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $15,982.46, with interest from August 18th, 1904, together with the costs and disbursements, amounting to $492.90 and the expenses of the sale. The approximate amount of the taxes and other liens which are to be allowed to the purchaser or paid by the referee, is $2,306.54, and interest.

STEAL TO SEE BALL GAME.

Boys Carry Away Almost Everything Movable from Vacant House.

Five boys, ranging from ten to fifteen years of age, are locked up in the rooms of the Gerry Society, charged with burglary. The police of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station accuse them of entering a vacant house at 236 East Seventy-second Street on Labor Day and carrying away practically all the piping in sight. The boys are Sylvester Martink, thirteen years old, of 1,351 Second Avenue; Thomas Clark, fifteen years old, of 1,396 Second Avenue; Bernard Shannon, fifteen years old, of 1,202 Third Avenue; Otto Stolger, ten years old, of 1,243 Third Avenue, and Michael Dougherty, thirteen years old, of 1,400 Second Avenue.

The Seventy-second Street house has been vacant for about three months, and since then renovators and decorators have been at work most of the time. When on Tuesday one of the agents went there to show a prospective tenant through, he found the place in chaos. The floors had been torn up, tubs had been pulled out of place, and every bit of lead and brass pipe had been taken away.

The police visited the old metal shops in the neighborhood and learned that five boys had sold a small amount of the piping at several of them. The police then went to the homes of the boys and found most of the pipe and fittings still unaccounted for in the cellars. The youngsters told the police that on Monday they had no spending money and wanted very much to see the Highlanders beat the Philadelphias. When they entered the house in Seventy-second Street they had no intention of stealing anything, but when they saw all the pipe exposed it seemed so easy they couldn't resist the chance to see the ball game. They will be arraigned in the Children's Court this morning.

"ENTERTAINED" THE RIGGERS.

Union Delegates Went Over to Hoboken to Attack Non-Union Men.

A dozen men, said to be members of an "entertainment committee" from the New York Riggers and Construction Union, visited Hoboken yesterday and attacked a gang of men at work at the plant of the United Electric Company. Charles Anderson, twenty-three years old, of Thirty-fourth Street, Brooklyn, and Isaac Havie of 69 Carmine Street, New York, were both injured, but not seriously.

About five weeks ago non-union men were employed by the company to rig up some new machinery. A delegate from the union told the foreman on the job to stop work. Words followed, and in the end the delegate got a thrashing. It was expected the union would make trouble at once, but nothing more was heard of the affair until yesterday.

The riggers, four in number, were busy yesterday morning on a scaffold, when the presence of the "entertainment committee" was made known by a brick which came hurtling through the air, just missing one of the riggers. This was followed by a shower of stones, one of which struck Anderson, knocking him from the scaffold. His shoulder was dislocated. Havie was struck by a stone and received a scalp wound.

The union men escaped before the police arrived.

HOTEL CLERK MURDERED; POLICE SEEK BELL BOY

Cash Drawer of Greek Hotel in Forty-second Street Rifled.

VICTIM'S MONEY ALSO TAKEN

Sands H. Butler, night clerk at the Greek Hotel at 30 East Forty-second Street, was murdered early yesterday morning in the reading room of the hotel. Percy Howard, the night bell boy, has not been seen since the discovery of the body, and Inspector McClusky sent out 5,000 circulars last night describing Howard and asking that he be arrested for the murder of Butler. The description was telegraphed also to the large cities of the East.

Butler, who was sixty-eight years old, was killed instantly with a blow on the side of the head with some sharp instrument. The murderer got $500 in money and a diamond ring worth as much more from Butler's body, overlooking $175 which the clerk had in an inside pocket. The hotel office cash drawer was rifled of $150 in bills and the private office desk was forced open and despoiled of $150 in bills and coin. The police declare that the murder was committed between 3:30 and 4 o'clock.

HOWARD WAS WITH BUTLER.

After midnight Butler and Howard were alone in the hotel office on the second floor above the restaurant and at the head of the stairs. There are sleeping apartments within thirty feet of the office on that floor which were occupied last night by guests, not one of whom was aroused.

It was Howard's duty as night bell boy to awake the hotel and restaurant employes at 5:30 o'clock every morning, but yesterday these employes were not called and overslept themselves.

Marian March, the checker in the restaurant, was first awake. When she went to the office it was empty. Glancing over the desk she saw Butler in an easy chair, drawn close to the curtained window of the reading room adjoining, seemingly asleep. As she started to rouse him she was joined by the cashier of the restaurant.

Together they walked to the reading room, and Miss March leaned over to touch the clerk when she saw a wound in his head. Frightened out of her wits she screamed time and again. The head waiter, J. Ledy, with ran to the room to see what the trouble was and then hastened up to the room of A. K. Ringa, one of the proprietors.

When Mr. Ringa reached the reading room and saw the body he telephoned to Police Headquarters. He discovered soon that the hotel had been robbed.

When Capt. Cooney and detectives from the Grand Central Sub-station searched Butler's pockets they found $175 in bills and his watch and chain in place, and thought first that the victim had not been robbed. Later, however, Charles Butler, son of the murdered man, said that his father made it a practice to carry about $600 in a wallet in his inside coat pocket for his own convenience. This wallet was gone, as was a handsome diamond ring which his father wore.

Coroner Jackson was summoned, and after an investigation said that Butler had been dead for some hours. "Death was instantaneous," declared the Coroner. "The crime was committed with some sharp instrument, possibly a heavy jackknife. There is a deep wound in the right temple, which penetrated the brain. This was the first wound inflicted, as was shown by the fact that the victim did not move after its infliction. The second wound was in the left side of the head. It was a glancing blow."

THINK MURDER WAS PLANNED.

"There can be no doubt," said Capt. Cooney, when he had ended his earlier investigations, "that Howard is the man we want. I believe he planned the murder carefully, and that he had made all arrangements for flight beforehand. This accounts for our inability to put our hands on him."

That the crime was committed between 2:30 and 4 o'clock is proved by the time-clock system of the hotel. There is a clock for the use of the night clerk, which shows that Butler was alive and awake to his duties at 3:30 o'clock. The time clocks throughout the hotel, upon which the night bellboy had to register every thirty minutes, show that he made his last round at that time.

Mr. Ringa does not believe that Butler was asleep when he was killed. The chair in which he was found was almost against the door of the reading room, and Butler's face was away from the door. Mr. Ringa thinks that the clerk was resting there for a moment or so, and that the murderer crept up behind him. The instrument with which the fatal blow was dealt was not found.

Percy Howard is an Englishman, twenty-three years of age. He speaks with a marked accent. He was employed by the day clerk of the hotel on Sept. 2 and assigned to night duty. He said he was a stranger in New York, and told a hard luck story, which won Butler's sympathy. When he applied for the position he was unable to give references. He told the hotel manager that he lived at 37 Bank Street.

At that address, which is a furnished room house, Manager James Peterson said that Howard had only been there a week, and that his rent had been paid in advance by another roomer. Peterson said he had been instructed by the police not to divulge the name of this man.

Inspector McClusky announced last night, however, the name of the man, who, he said, was Charles V. Bell, a young man, who with his brother lived in the Bank Street house. Bell told the police that early last week he was stopped on the street by Howard, who asked for the price of a night's lodging. Bell took pity on the young fellow, and after hearing part of his story, took him home with him, and made a "shakedown" for him to sleep upon that night.

On the following night Howard did not appear at the house, but he did call on Bell last Thursday night. At that time he told Bell he had obtained a position as bellboy in the Greek Hotel, and wished a room for himself in the boarding house. Bell advanced him the necessary $2, and Howard maintained the room up to night before last, when, after spending the day at the house, he went to work at the usual hour, and failed after that to return to the house.

Bell said afterward that Howard told him on Saturday that he had gone to work on Friday at the Greek Hotel while Bell and Howard were about the house.

ONCE A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE.

Howard told Bell what purported to be the story of his life. Howard said he had fought during the Boer war and received a wound in the head; that afterward he had gone to Central or South America and taken part in one of the many revolutions and was injured. He came to America a month ago, and wished only to get money enough to get back to Central or South America or wherever it was he participated in the petty revolution. Howard expressed an eagerness to take charge of certain army operations, and it is believed he had military aspirations.

Bell said Howard slept in the most nervous manner, getting but an hour's sleep throughout the night; starting at slight sounds, and often getting out of bed, as though afraid of something.

Bell is at present out of employment, and is assisting the police. He had traveled in Australia and other countries, and said he had no reason to doubt Howard's stories of his travels, as his descriptions of places and things were accurate.

Howard is described as 5 feet 10 inches in height, with light curly hair, large straight nose, long face, light blue eyes, somewhat bloodshot, and bad teeth. He was born in Nottingham, England. When last seen about the hotel he wore a gray suit and a small English cap.

Butler was a man of considerable means. He was well known in the hotel business. For a number of years he was head bartender at the Grand Union Hotel, and later held positions as clerk at several of the smaller hotels. He had been night clerk of the Greek Hotel since its opening, three years ago. He was a widower and leaves three children, two sons and a daughter. The daughter is at present traveling in Maine. She is a deaconess in the Metropolitan Temple, and is well known in charitable circles. One of the sons, W. L. Butler, lives in San Francisco.

TAKE NEW STEP TO END BUILDING TIE-UP

Marble Workers Meet Bosses Under President Nason's Plan.

EMPLOYERS' APPROVE SCHEME

Willing That All Unions Except Plumbers and Electrical Men Settle Disputes as Individuals.

The first peace conference in accordance with the plan of President Nason of the Building Trades Alliance to settle the building fight at meetings between committees of the individual unions and individual associations of employers took place yesterday. The conferees were representatives of the unions in the marble industry and of the Marble Industry Employers' Association, and all the bitterness which characterized the first stages of the building dispute was eliminated. It was reported after the conference that progress toward a settlement was made, and that another conference would be held in a few days which, it was believed, will end in the marble cutters returning to work. This will enable a number of mechanics in other trades to return also.

In Nason's plan, which the employers' associations are willing to try, except in the case of the electrical workers and the plumbers, the Building Trades Alliance is not mentioned. There are at least 40,000 people idle now, and many thousands would be thrown idle in other trades if the trouble lasted ten days longer.

"I believe another week will show a considerable clearing up of the situation," said President Nason yesterday, "and think in less than two weeks the whole trouble will be over. I am pretty sure that when we settle with the associations of employers and the other trades we will be able to make terms with the Master Plumbers' Association and the Electrical Contractors' Association."

Lewis Harding of the Employers' Association said that his organization would welcome any serious attempt to end the trouble, but that the Plumbers and Electrical Workers' Unions could never be recognized. They had waited too long, he explained, and new unions under the arbitration agreement had been formed in these trades.

"While no application has been made to the Building Trades Employers' Association for a conference," he continued, "I believe that there is not a subordinate association of employers, with the exception of those in the two trades I have mentioned, who would not be willing to confer with the individual unions. Any attempt to entrench us into recognition of the alliance, however, would only result in failure. Let the alliance keep out of it if there is going to be any settlement. We have not changed our position from the first. We will deal only with unions, but when unions have passed the day of grace and we have to form new unions in any trades in order to get men, we will deal only with the latter, and the old unions will have to step down and out.

"Pending the expected settlement the alliance is keeping very quiet. It is recognized that if a settlement is effected the unions can remain in the alliance if they like, but it cannot be made a factor in dealing with the employers. They will act simply as if there was no alliance.

According to Mr. Harding, 700 carpenters are at work who have signed the arbitration agreement individually. Of these, he said, 500 are members of the Brotherhood of Carpenters who have broken from the ranks. There are 3,300 locked-out Brotherhood men who have yet to be heard from.

WOMAN UNDER WHALEN'S BED.

He Yelled "Burglars," but It Was Only the Housekeeper.

Badly frightened by finding what he believed to be a burglar under his bed at 1 A. M. yesterday, William Whalen, better known as "Six" Whalen, of 71 Bright Street, Jersey City, roused his family by shouts for help. His two sons, stalwart young men, rushed to his room.

"What's the matter, father?" they asked together.

"There's a burglar in the room," said Whalen.

"Where is he?" said the elder son.

"I guess he must be under the bed," said Whalen. "He was rolling on the floor when I saw him."

The young men looked under the bed and found, not a burglar, but a woman. They dragged her out and stood her on her feet. She proved to be Mary Martin, thirty years old, who had been employed by the family as housekeeper when Mrs. Whalen died five years ago. Miss Martin refused to say why she had hidden under the bed, and was turned over to the police. Later she was fined $5 by Police Justice Higgins for disorderly conduct.

Mr. Whalen was formerly an active politician. Twenty years ago he was President of the old Board of Public Works, which was composed of six members, and at one time claimed to be the whole board, from which came his sobriquet of "Six." He said he would not ordinarily have been frightened by the knowledge that someone was under the bed had it not been that on Wednesday, when he reached home, he found on the bureau this note, written by his son:

Dear Father: Look out for Mary. She said she would poison the whole family. Do not eat anything she cooks. From your son,
WILLIAM WHALEN.

"This upset me," said Mr. Whalen, because I could get no explanation of it, every one being in bed. When I heard a noise showing that there was some one under the bed, I called for help."

Miss Martin denied that she had murderous intention of any kind.

Diamond Dealer Lipp Out on Bail.

Abraham Lipp, a diamond merchant of Boston, was released from the Tombs yesterday in $2,500 bail. He is charged with grand larceny by Sol Lindenborn, diamond importer, of 170 Broadway. Lipp, when arraigned in General Sessions, pleaded not guilty. The indictment accuses him of buying diamonds to the value of $900 and paying for them with a check on the Puritan Trust Company of Boston, where there were insufficient funds.

The New Black Suits for Fall Wear at $15

It is just such a showing as will delight the fastidious dresser. It is a representative Vogel Brothers' showing, which means that nothing has been left undone to make it complete. Every fashionable fabric is included—black cheviots, black Thibets, undressed cheviots. The new double-breasted and single-breasted suits are here in 12 distinct models, made with all the little changes of style that have been brought about by the new season. Collars and lapels still button low, but are cut wider, shoulders are wide and shapely, coats are a trifle longer and looser. But above all you will note the perfect fit and set of the garments, and the careful tailoring of the coat fronts, which never wrinkle up or lose shape. These suits on sale at the special price

DOWN-TOWN BUILDING SETTLES

Easterly Wall of Germania Life Structure Affected by Adjoining Work.

The six-story building of the Germania Life Insurance Company, at Nassau and Cedar Streets, has settled several inches at its northeasterly corner, where it adjoins on the Cedar Street side, the new building of Harvey Fisk & Sons. The settlement has already been sufficient to cause joints in the stone work to separate and to crack sills and copings up through the row of windows nearest to the Harvey Fisk building. A framework of heavy timbers has been put in each of these windows to prevent the broken stones above them from collapsing.

A close watch has been kept on the building for some time, and it is now believed that the settling has ceased. Workmen were busy yesterday putting up scaffolding preparatory to repairing the damaged wall. The Superintendent of the Germania Life Building said that these repairs would be all that would be necessary, and that the interior of the structure had not been affected seriously. In the basement on the Cedar Street side a small crack in the tile flooring and a slope of three or four inches in one corner of the ceiling showed the effects of the settling of the easterly wall, and the tenants said that they had to have locks refitted and the tops of doors planed off in order to close them.

The trouble resulted probably from some defect in the underpinning of the wall of the Germania Life Building when the Harvey Fisk Building was put up on the adjoining lots. The latter structure is owned by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and it will bear the expense of fixing up the Germania Life Building.

Exonerated of Homicide Charge.

William Vrbsky, twenty-one years old, of 310 East Seventy-first Street, arrested on a charge of homicide in connection with the death of Joseph Vokalek, a baker, who was found with his skull fractured in East Seventy-second Street last Friday night, was exonerated in the Yorkville Court yesterday through detective work by his brother, Fred Vrbsky, which then resulted in the arrest of Michael Rinn, nineteen years old, of 426 East Seventy-sixth Street, as the real assailant. Rinn was committed to the Tombs without bail by Coroner Goldenkranz, Vrbsky being retained in custody as a witness.

LAYS IT TO ART COMMISSION.

Mayor Explains About the Delay in Manhattan Bridge Plans.

Mayor McClellan laughed at the report published yesterday to the effect that there was a scheme on foot on the part of Tammany Hall to let out big contracts to its favorites for the new Manhattan bridge. The Mayor said that the delay in the new bridge was at the door of the Art Commission, and that he had no intention of hastening its action.

"I understand," said the Mayor, "that the Secretary of War has never approved the eye-bar plans for the new bridge, although it has been stated that he had."

Mayor McClellan approves of the wire cable plans as furnished to the Art Commission by the Bridge Commissioner, Best.

In speaking of the contracts for the work Commissioner Best said that as far as he could learn the Roebling Company, with which Frank Croker, the son of Richard Croker, is connected, would not bid.

MAN MISSING A MONTH DEAD.

Body Found in Harlem River That of Plainfield Bookkeeper.

A body now in the Morgue, which was found in the Harlem River at the foot of Dykman Street, on Sept. 5, has proved to be that of William S. Benton, head bookkeeper for the A. M. Griffin Hardware Company of Plainfield, N. J., who disappeared mysteriously on Aug. 3. The identification was made yesterday by Asa Randolph, who had been searching for the missing man ever since he went away.

Mr. Benton, who was sixty-five years of age, was deeply religious, and it is believed that he was temporarily deranged when he disappeared.

Child Wife Attempted Suicide.

Sixteen-year-old Ellen Mills of 224 Clinton Street left the house at 1 o'clock yesterday morning after a quarrel with her husband, and purchased some acid. This she took home, saying to her husband that she was going to end her life. The reason advanced for the act was that there was too much mother-in-law. The husband tried to take the bottle away, and in the struggle his wife was burned. She was taken to the Beth Israel Hospital and later to the Madison Street Station, where she was locked up on a charge of attempted suicide.

SIGN PEACE PACT, BUT NOT FOR THREE YEARS

Firemen Alone Accept Interborough Contract for That Period.

AMALGAMATED STANDS OUT

Will Demand Eight-Hour Day When Subway Opens—Engineers in for Two Years.

After another protracted wrangle over its provisions and phraseology, the subway peace pact between the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and the unions comprising the elevated road employes was finally ratified and signed last night at the close of a three-hour conference in the Interborough offices. It was not, however, the three-year contract as proposed by the company and believed to have been agreed upon by all the unions.

W. D. Mahon, international head of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America, as had been predicted, refused to sign the agreement for three years, taking vehement exception to the three-year clause on the ground that the Amalgamated Association had gained practically nothing in the present controversy, and did not propose to be tied up by any three-year clause. Mr. Mahon plans that his organization, as soon as the service subway has been started, shall present new demands, including one for an eight-hour working day.

As the case now stands, the Brotherhood of Firemen is the only body that is bound for three years, for, on behalf of the Brotherhood of Engineers, the contract was signed only for a period of two years. President Mahon declared last night that as far as his organization is concerned, it had no binding force beyond the life of agreements already existing between the association and the company. These expire on March 1, 1905.

The text of the agreement, which is a rather lengthy document, was not given out for publication last night. In its final form, according to officials of the company and labor representatives who have taken part in the conferences, it has practically been narrowed down so as to apply only to motormen in the subway. Vice President Bryan of the Interborough made the following statement about it:

"While the three-year agreement is binding on all the organizations, its provisions more particularly have reference to the conditions of employment for motormen in the subway. With the exception of the provision for a ten-hour working day, it reads almost clause for clause as does the contract we have with the brotherhoods on the elevated road.

"This ends the whole controversy. Everything has been amicably adjusted. The agreement will be printed, and as soon as this has bene done will be given out to the press."

Mr. Bryan said further that the time for elevated road employes to put in their applications for positions in the subway had been extended beyond to-day, the date previously fixed, and would expire on Monday instead.

The conference began shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. After it had been in session about an hour, Mr. Bryan and Superintendent Hedley came out.

"It's too hot for us in there," said Mr. Bryan. "The officers of the amalgamated and the brotherhoods are having a little scrap between themselves over their demands, and the discussion has grown so warm that Mr. Hedley and myself think we'd better leave them alone for a time until they have cooled down."

Mr. Bryan said the dispute among the union officials arose over the seniority and priority clause of the agreement. The officials of the Brotherhood of Firemen insisted that members of that organization ought to be eligible to motormen's jobs in the subway under the same seniority and priority relation as members of the Brotherhood of Engineers.

"I am sure I like to see you boys get a square deal," Mr. Bryan had said to them, "and whenever that is possible we will see that the former firemen are taken care of in the appointment of subway jobs."

"What about us?" went up in chorus from the Amalgamated officials. "Are we going to get anything out of this at all?"

Then came a storm of objections from the representatives of the Brotherhoods, who claimed they were entitled to special consideration when it came to putting on motormen. The dispute lasted about twenty minutes, but did not worry either Mr. Bryan or Mr. Hedley, as they knew that Grand Chief Stone of the Engineers had left the city perfectly satisfied with the terms of the agreement, and had left instructions to his deputy, Mr. Hurley, to sign the pact. Nor is the Interborough concerning itself about the attitude of President Mahon, for as long as the company is assured of a full complement of motormen to run their subway trains its experience in the present emergency leads the officials to believe that they will have no difficulty in getting men to fill the jobs on the elevated road now held by members of the Amalgamated Association.

The situation between the Amalgamated and the Brotherhoods promises to become interesting. A labor man who claimed to be well informed said yesterday that Mr. Mahon had asked the Brotherhood men to delay action until after the Amalgamated had had time to complete its organization, now under way, of all the street railway men in Greater New York. With both elevated and surface men united, he argued, a tie-up could be made more complete and effective. The Brotherhoods, however, were for precipitate action on their own dispute, and Local President Pepper fostered similar sentiment among his men in the local Amalgamated division.

Vice President Bryan signed the contract on behalf of the Interborough Company. The failure of Mr. Hurley of the engineers to sign for the three-year period was said to be due to the fact that the National Executive Board of the Brotherhood of Engineers will meet two years from now, and that the powers of the executive officers of the organization do not reach beyond that period. Local President Pepper of the Amalgamated Association signed the contract, as far as it has any bearing on the conditions governing members of his organization who may become motormen on the subway.

BANKER INSANE IN STREET.

William Conlin of Telluride Found Wandering About Aimlessly.

Dressed as a laborer and aimlessly asking passers-by where he was, William Conlin, a banker and broker of Telluride, Col., was picked up last evening by Policeman Leggett of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station at Eighty-third Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

By a curious coincidence, the man's identity was established at Bellevue, immediately upon his arrival there. A short time before he arrived Dr. Daniel A. Sinclair of 226 East Sixty-second Street called at the hospital and asked Night Superintendent McHale if he had any information about a man named William Conlin, whom he described as being forty-six years old, 5 feet 7 inches tall, and heavily built. Looking over the records, McHale could find nothing which corresponded to this description, and then Dr. Sinclair produced a picture of the man for whom he was looking.

He said, further, that this man had come on from the West a couple of weeks ago to consult Prof. William Broaddus Pritchard, an alienist of 105 West Seventy-third Street. He said the man was a sufferer from neurasthenia.

Dr. Sinclair went away, leaving the photograph with Superintendent McHale. He had been gone not more than ten minutes when the patrol wagon from the West Sixty-eighth Street Station drove up to the hospital, with a man so violent as to require the efforts of two policemen to restrain him. McHale jumped to the conclusion that this was the man for whom Dr. Sinclair had been inquiring just before.

"Are you Mr. Conlin?" asked McHale.

"Yes," was the answer. "That's me. Are you the man I sold those stocks and bonds to two years ago?"

McHale humored him and gradually drew from him this story:

"I came here ten days ago with $8,000 in my pocket. I met some men who said they knew me, but I don't remember about them. Where's all my money and where are my good clothes?"

Conlin was removed to the insane pavilion for observation. Dr. Pritchard said last night that Conlin has been living with him until two days ago, when he mysteriously disappeared. He said that he is a heavy stockholder in Colorado silver mines.

Conlin seemed to regain almost complete possession of his mental faculties after Superintendent McHale had questioned him. He appeared worn out and in need of nourishment. He said that he had been wandering about town, but was unable to give any connected account of where he had been.

DISPOSSESS DOROTHY RUSSELL

Lillian Russell's daughter Dorothy and her husband, Abbott Einstein, who were married with a great parade of secrecy about a year ago, have been dispossessed from their apartment at 219 West Eightieth Street. The cause of the couple's hasty removal of their furniture and themselves is the old familiar one—they didn't care to pay the rent. They have been gone about ten days now, and the apartments they lived in have been let out to other tenants.

When Miss Solomon—she is known to stage folk as Dorothy Russell—married Einstein there was no hint from any one that they didn't have enough money to live on comfortably. He was said to be of a prosperous family, and it was common knowledge that the happy mother-in-law was possessed of a great deal more than was necessary to keep her alive and well. Mrs. Einstein and her husband therefore are supposed to have failed to pay their rent more because they didn't choose to than because they couldn't.

When the non-committal janitor at the Roycroft, 219 West Eightieth Street, was questioned last night his replies consisted mostly of eloquent shrugs of the shoulders, punctuated occasionally by reluctant monosyllables.

"Same reason people usually move out," he grunted between shrugs. "Couldn't, wouldn't, come up with the dough. That's about all there is to it, s' far as I know."

All the furniture in the apartment was moved out some days ago, when the dispossess proceedings were instituted. It now rests in a large storage warehouse in the upper west side.

Miss Russell used to come to the apartment house in an automobile to see her daughter. The janitor ventured the suggestion that it was "mighty queer for a girl who had a rich mamma like that to be run out for want o' rent money." Only a day before the furniture van drew up to the Roycroft, Miss Russell came up in an automobile and took her daughter for a drive. Now Mr. and Mrs. Einstein are in Far Rockaway, far from the calls of insistent landlords.

The agents for the apartment house are the Frank L. Fisher Company of 440 Columbus Avenue. A man who lives in the Roycroft said last night that he suspected there was something behind the removal.

"There may have been a quarrel of some sort between them and the agents," he said, "and they may have thought they didn't owe the money. Most of the people who live here think the couple refused to pay for some other reason than because they needed the money to keep the wolf from the door."

FORMAL END OF MEAT STRIKE.

Stock Handlers Apply for Their Old Places, but May Not Get Them.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—The fifty-nine days' strike of butchers and allied trades at the stock yards is off. The vote of the Conference Board of the Allied Trades Council to bring the trouble to an end was unanimous.

More than 600 live stock handlers appeared at the office of the Union Stock Yards to-day to apply for their old positions. They were not taken back, being informed that they would be sent for when needed. It is understood that before going to work they will be required to sign an agreement setting forth that they return as individuals and not as an organization.

Business Agent Golden of the Teamsters said that the teamsters will go back to work as an organization or not at all.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 9.—The action of President Donnelly in declaring the packing house strike off was unanimously ratified at a meeting to-day of the conference board of the local employes. To-morrow many of the men will apply for reinstatement.

PANAMA NEAR TO BREAK WITH UNITED STATES

SITUATION STILL CRITICAL

Rough Methods of American Officials Are Declared to Have Made Revolution Possible.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 9.—A cable dispatch received to-day from a correspondent of The Constitution in Panama says:

"A crisis is at hand in the affairs of Panama. The most important question affecting the future of the republic will be settled during the next two weeks. Public feeling has been aroused to fever pitch.

"For a time so excited were the people of Panama that there were open threats of another revolution and of a return to the jurisdiction of Colombia.

"The issue under discussion is the vital one of control of the ports or harbors at the two ends of the canal.

"Panama claims that according to Article 2 of the treaty they are hers and must be under her jurisdiction and sovereignty in order to protect her revenues and foreign trade.

"The commission insists that Article 2 has no such meaning and that it will be impossible for the United States to construct and control the canal unless it has absolute authority over the two entrances.

"The distrust and bitterness toward the United States grew out of the autocratic methods of the commission.

"Mr. Barrett undoubtedly prevented an armed clash between the Panama and Zone Port and police officials.

"While it is generally conceded that Admiral Walker, Gen. Davis, and their associates are able men and suited for control of the construction of the canal, it is asserted here that they are evidently not schooled in diplomacy.

"They are too inclined to treat Panama as a subordinate and dependent section of the United States and not like an independent State as the treaty provides.

"Don Tomas Arias, the head of President Amador's Cabinet, is known to have said that Admiral Walker and Gen. Davis, although meaning well, seemed to regard him as the Governor of some American colony.

"Admiral Walker, during his present stay on the Isthmus, has twice annoyed the Panama Government by disregarding all diplomatic regulations in his method of taking up matters that involve relations between the zone and Panama Governments.

"In each instance, however, Minister Barrett has poured oil on the troubled waters of the little republic's dignity, despite the fact that Admiral Walker's course has not been respectful to the legation.

"The situation is still critical, but the American Minister has won his point, and the confidence of the Panama Government and people, while at the same time paving the way for the final negotiations which will begin in the near future, and nipping in the bud a revolution."

BISHOP WALDEN INJURED.

His Wife Also Badly Hurt in Runaway Accident in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 9.—Bishop J. M. Walden, retired, of the Methodist Church, and his wife were seriously hurt in a runaway to-day.

Mrs. Walden's arm was broken and the Bishop was badly bruised. Both were taken to the hospital.

READING VOTING TRUST ENDS.

Affairs of the Company Now in the Hands of the Stockholders.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9.—With the payment to-day of the recently declared semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent. on the first preferred stock of the Reading Company the voting trust of the corporation was dissolved. The affairs of the company will in future be in the hands of the shareholders.

The voting trustees, J. P. Morgan and Frederick P. Olcott of New York and C. S. W. Packard, had acted as guardians for the stock since 1896. In that year it was stipulated that until 4 per cent. had been paid on the first preferred stock for two consecutive years all the shares should be controlled by the voting trustees.

"JOHN DOE" IN BUFFALO.

Graft Case There Brings in Name of New York Statesman.

BUFFALO, Sept. 9.—An investigation by a committee of the Board of Councilmen into allegations of bribery in connection with the building of certain sewers having brought out testimony indicating corruption, District Attorney Coatesworth was asked to-day what, if any, action, he proposed taking. He replied:

"From statements made to me by E. C. Randall, lawyer, as to information which he has received concerning wrong doing in the matter of the construction of the Ferry Street sewer, it very strongly appears that the Grand Jury is the proper tribunal to conduct a further investigation into the several transactions which are alleged to have occurred in connection with that work, and such investigation will be had before that body notwithstanding the work of the Councilmanic Investigation Committee."

Mr. Randall, who instituted the investigation, made the first formal move by presenting typewritten charges on information and belief that John Doe and others since 1.98 have conspired to defraud the city by securing municipal contracts at high figures and dividing the profits.

Three Prisoners Accused of Burglary in Warren County Walk Out.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Three prisoners, John Case, Walter Bettys, and another man whose name was Sullivan, walked out of the Warren County Jail last night, the Under Sheriff who took supper to the prisoners having left the outer door open.

Case was one of the trio who dug through the jail wall last week, but after ten days' wandering gave himself up. The three men were all awaiting indictment by the Grand Jury for burglary.

THREE GUARDSMEN DISMISSED.

Mount Vernon Youths "Bobtailed" Out of Service for Alleged Assault.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Sept. 9.—As the result of a fight at the Mount Vernon Armory between four members of Company F, First Regiment, J. J. Moore, Jr., Harry Behrman, and Frank McGuire, well-known young men of that city, all received papers to-day notifying them that they had been "bobtailed" out of the service.

In addition to being dismissed, the three privates have been summoned to appear in the Mount Vernon Police Court Sept. 12 to answer to the charge of assault. The summonses were issued on the complaint of Alexander McLoughlin, a young militiaman of New Rochelle, who alleged that his three comrades beat him so badly in the fight in the armory that he was confined to his bed for three days.

McLoughlin says that the privates had a grievance against him ever since the company camped at Oakland Beach because he refused to let them through the lines without a pass while he was on sentry duty.

WESTERN PACIFIC IS GOULD'S

Addition to His System Admitted in California.

STOCKTON, Cal., Sept. 9.—The Gould lines have gained control of the Western Pacific Railroad, according to Fred West, Edward T. Jeffreys, President of the Denver and Rio Grande, has just been elected to the Directorate of the Western Pacific.

Mr. West stated also that the Beckwith Pass route has been definitely decided upon, and that it would not be more than 1 per cent. grade from San Francisco to Salt Lake City. Construction will begin first on the latter place, and very soon work will begin from San Francisco, Sacramento, and Stockton. At Salt Lake City the Western Pacific will connect with other roads of the Gould system.

FAILS, BLAMES WORLD'S FAIR.

Company Alleges 30,000,000 Tickets Have Not Been Paid For.

BOSTON, Sept. 9.—The New System Ticket Company, a New Jersey corporation to which was awarded the contract for printing the tickets used by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, has assigned for the benefit of its creditors to Richard B. Stanley of Boston. No statement of assets or liabilities has been given out.

President Bradstreet of the company says the failure was made necessary because the St. Louis Fair Company had neglected to pay for the tickets used at the fair grounds. Nearly 30,000,000 tickets had been shipped to St. Louis, but the drafts for the payment of them were, according to President Bradstreet, returned unpaid with requests for more time. On account of these delays the ticket company was unable to meet its own obligations.

CAPT. NOWELL'S DIVORCE SUIT.

He Testifies in Boston That His Wife Pelted Him with Bric-a-Brac.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 9.—The divorce suit of Capt. John P. Nowell of Brookline against his wife, Elizabeth B. Nowell, known in theatrical circles as Lizzie B. Raymond, was heard to-day by Judge Sherman at Dedham. It was uncontested, Mrs. Nowell being in South Africa, it is stated. Capt. Nowell testified, among other things, that on frequent occasions she had pelted him with bric-a-brac as he lay in bed.

When Capt. Nowell and Miss Raymond were married there was agitation in Brookline and Boston society, where the bridegroom was prominent in military, social, and business circles. His relatives had strongly opposed the match. The vaudeville star forsook the stage for a short time, but was soon seen behind the footlights again singing the old songs.

BALLOONIST BREAKS LEG.

Wind Swung His Parachute Heavily Against a House.

"Prof." Kabrich, the balloonist, who had been making balloon ascensions for four days at the Richmond County Fair and Horse Show, at the "Cove," West New Brighton, S. I., broke his leg in a descent yesterday afternoon.

The balloonist had been landing on his parachute in the Staten Island Sound. Yesterday there was a strong wind blowing from the southeast and the wind carried his parachute shoreward, and he landed heavily on the roof of a building on Columbia Street, West New Brighton. When he failed to come down from the building his attendant went up to see what was the trouble, and was startled to find him injured.

Kabrich was removed to St. Vincent's Hospital. It is said that he will remain there for two months.

HOT SPRING IN THE SIMPLON.

Tunnel Work Suspended Until Refrigerators Can Be Installed.

ROME, Sept. 9.—Work on the Simplon tunnel, which it was expected would be completed by the beginning of next month, was suddenly stopped to-day owing to the exposure of a hot spring flowing 500 gallons per minute, while the temperature in the tunnel reached 112 degrees. Refrigerators will be installed and the work resumed a month from date.

The Simplon tunnel, which is being cut through Simplon Mountain, will be 12,374 yards long, and it has already been pierced for a distance of 21,142 yards.

A dispatch from Turin Sept. 20, 1902, said that the heat in the interior of the Simplon Mountain was deadly to the workmen in the tunnel. The men had to be sprinkled with cold water constantly, and though fresh air was pumped into the tunnel many of the workmen succumbed,

LEADERS URGE PARKER TO TAKE THE STUMP

Matter to be Put Before the Judge Immediately.

SAY IT WOULD HELP GREATLY

They Also Suggest That His Home at Esopus Is Too Hard for Conferrees to Reach.

Strong pressure is being brought to bear on Judge Parker to take the stump and make a dozen or fifteen campaign speeches in the leading cities in the State which are strong fighting ground. Friends of the Judge, as well as many of his party managers, are urging this course upon him as the best possible way to make the closing five or six weeks of the campaign enthusiastic.

Some of the Judge's friends and managers, and many of the editors who have just visited him, have suggested to him that his speaking could do more good and could better make the fight a winning one than any other course. It was urged that the one thing more than anything else that the people of the country want to see is the candidate and hear him speak on the issues. To this end they have asked him to depart from his present course so as to make at least one speech each in New York and Brooklyn, one each in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, and Albany, making six in his own State.

Then it is urged that he make a speech in Baltimore and one in West Virginia, preferably in Parkersburg. Another speech in Boston, to recognize New England and to reply to some Republican speakers on their own ground, and some speeches in the West are included in the suggestions that have been urged on the candidate. In this class, it was said, might be included a speech in Indianapolis, one in Chicago, one in Milwaukee, one in St. Louis and one either in Cincinnati or in Louisville. It also is urged that Judge Parker speak in Kansas City and Denver.

Many of these suggestions have come from men who are conducting the campaign from the National Committee headquarters, and between to-day and Monday William F. Sheehan, Chairman of the National Executive Committee, will go over this ground with Judge Parker at Rosemount. When Mr. Sheehan returns to town on Monday he may have some important announcements to make along these lines. Mr. Sheehan will go to Esopus this afternoon.

In addition to taking the stump for some important speeches it also has been urged on Judge Parker that he arrange to spend some of his time late this month and in October in this city. He is being urged to adopt the same attitude toward the Presidency that Grover Cleveland adopted in 1892 when he remained in the Victoria Hotel and there received visitors from all sections.

It has been suggested to Judge Parker that his Esopus home is inaccessible and that a journey there to see the candidate requires an entire day's time in going and coming, with only a very short time allowed the visitor to see the Judge. The managers assert that they do not expect or ask the Judge to take any part in the actual running of the campaign, but they do want him where he will be accessible.

JERSEY GIRL WOULD ENLIST.

Wanted to Follow Lover, but Recruiting Sergeant Was Hardhearted.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 9.—When a blue-eyed girlish-looking "youth" applied to the officer of the guard at Fort McHenry today for information concerning a private in a company recently at the fort, but now in service in the Philippines, the officer was struck by the natty appearance of his visitor. When informed that the soldier friend of the pretty stranger had gone to the Philippines the latter was surprised, but after a moment's hesitation announced intention of enlisting in the army.

Before the recruiting Sergeant could be communicated with the officer of the guard discerned, to his amazement, that the applicant was a young woman. She gave her name as Annie Eastwood of Newark, N. J., said she was nineteen years old and that she was in search of her sweetheart, in order to join whom she was willing to undergo all the hardships of a soldier's life. She pleaded in vain with the officer to enroll her as a man and give her a uniform.

PLATT SUES FOR SPRING HATS.

Wants Milliner to Refund—But Only as Express Company's President.

United States Senator Thomas C. Platt is suing Morris Gross, a milliner, of 17 Division Street, to compel him to take back $36.25 worth of hats which he sold to Miss J. Kabot of Philadelphia last Spring. When the case was called in the Thirteenth District Court yesterday morning there was a burst of laughter at the mention of the plaintiff's name. Judge Sanders rebuked the disturbers of judicial decorum.

"We have a distinguished plaintiff in this case," he said, "but that is no excuse for levity in a court room."

Abraham Schepper, representing Mr. Gross, asked for a continuance, saying that he wished to put Senator Platt on the stand. The case accordingly went over until Sept. 16. It was Mr. Gross who divulged the identity of the plaintiff. He laughed when asked if it was really the Senator who was suing him.

"It's the real thing," he said. "I sold Miss Kabot $36 worth of hats in May, and shipped them to her by express. They were Summer hats and are not worth 30 cents a dozen after the Summer is over. The hats got lost somewhere on the road, and Miss Kabot refused to pay the bill when it was presented. Then I made the express company pay for them. I thought the whole incident closed when I received notice of the suit instituted by Senator Platt."

"What has the Senator to do with it?" Mr. Gross was asked.

"He's the President of the express company which paid for the hats," said Gross, as he laughed again.

GIRL SAVES JUDGE'S SON.

Brings to Shore Gerald Fitzgerald, Attacked with Cramps.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, Sept. 9.—That Gerald Fitzgerald, son of Judge Fitzgerald of New York, did not meet death in the surf here to-day was only because of the pluck and endurance displayed by his companion, Miss Blanche Levien of 640 Madison Avenue, New York.

They were swimming from Fourth Avenue to Seventh, when Fitzgerald was seized with cramps. Placing one arm about her companion, Miss Levien slowly swam shoreward, Fitzgerald weakly assisting. When almost on the point of giving up they found they could touch bottom.

TWO DAYS' FIRE IN MEXICO.

Losses in Progreso May Amount to $1,200,000, with Little Insurance.

PROGRESO, Mexico, Sept. 9.—A fierce fire which started here yesterday raged unchecked all day. It wiped out an entire block of business houses occupied by firms engaged in the general merchandise business. The loss is estimated at from $1,000,000 to $1,200,000, with little insurance.

The burned territory consists of the square two blocks south of the water front and facing one of the principal plazas, directly opposite the Custom House.

CALIFORNIA FORESTS ABLAZE.

Fine Red Wood Trees in Big Basin State Park Threatened.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—Forest fires are doing great damage in several sections of California. Marin County fires have burned over the slopes of Mount Tamalpias and now threaten the Mount Tamalpias scenic railway and timber in the adjacent canyons.

The Big Basin State Park, in Santa Cruz and Santa Clara Counties, which contains some of the largest and finest redwood trees in the State, seems doomed to destruction, though hundreds of men are fighting the fires.

COMPANY TO RAISE THE MAINE.

Memorial to be Erected with Material from the Wreck.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The United States Battleship Maine Salvage Company was incorporated here to-day with a capital of $600,000, the incorporators being Joseph De Wyckoff, Clarence R. Wilson, and Samuel S. Paschal.

The purpose of the corporation is to raise the wreck of the Maine in Havana harbor and to donate to some organization or the United States Government sufficient material from the wreck for the erection of a permanent memorial made wholly of such material.

A NEW SMOKELESS POWDER.

Government Making a Kind Similar to Makaroff's Invention.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Within the next few days a test will be made at the naval proving grounds at Indian Head, Md., of a new form of smokeless powder. For several months the Government powder factory has been engaged in the manufacture of this new powder, which closely resembles that first designed and made by the ill-starred Admiral Makaroff of the Russian Navy.

The change in the smokeless powder used in the navy was directed by Rear Admiral Converse, chief of the naval ordnance bureau, in view of the numerous severe accidents aboard ship.

LOCKED TREASURER IN SAFE.

Young Desperadoes in Ohio Rob and Imprison a County Official.

POMEROY, Ohio, Sept. 9.—Two youthful strangers to-day entered the County Treasurer's office, covered Treasurer Chase with revolvers, and robbed the safe of $14,000. They then locked Chase in the vault and escaped.

Mr. Chase was locked up nearly three hours before he was found and released by his wife. A local banker was secured to work the combination as Mr. Chase directed the work from inside the safe. Five thousand dollars in gold in the bottom of the safe was overlooked by the robbers.

CAN'T BAR ITALIAN WORKERS.

Treaty Guarantees Them Property Rights, Corporation Counsel Says.

Controller Grout yesterday received an opinion from Corporation Counsel Delany to the effect that the law forbidding the employment of aliens on public works was unconstitutional, at least as regards certain nationalities. This ruling was evoked by a complaint by the People's Security Company that L. Selby was employing aliens on the ironwork of school buildings at Gates and Waverly Avenues, and Seventh Avenue and Seventeenth Street, Brooklyn.

Mr. Delany cites the Federal Constitution as declaring treaties to be supreme law of the land, and holds that Italian subjects in this country are by treaty guaranteed the same rights and privileges in regard to person and property as American citizens; therefore he concludes that the prohibition against their employment must be clearly ineffective.

TEXANS THANK MISS GOULD.

Humane Society's Appreciation of Her Efforts to Protect Birds.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 9.—A letter has been sent to Miss Helen Gould by the Texas Humane Society of Waco, which reads in part:

"Not only for our organization, but for the farming interests of the Southwest, we offer thanks for your generous contribution toward bird protection and for sending Prof. Isaac M. Brown, the distinguished ornithologist, to Texas to promote the study of bird life with the view of the preservation of those species most likely to destroy the boll weevil now infesting the cotton fields all over the South.

"It is certainly true that insects pernicious to vegetation have their counterpoise in birds that destroy them, and to destroy the birds is to protect the insects, whereas to preserve the birds is to bring on insect extermination. Centuries of present bird destriction have destroyed the equilibrium and consequently the insect plague is threatening agricultural interests, especially cotton, which appears to be in danger of total elimination as a factor in the welfare of the States cultivating that staple."

The letter is signed by President Alfred Abell and Secretary M. B. Davis.

OKU'S INFANTRY UNRIVALED

Worn-Out Japanese, However, Must Rest and Get Their Railway Into Working Order—Yin-Kow Very Useful to Them.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, Sept. 9.—Liao-Yang at sunrise on Sept. 4 presented a dismal spectacle. The Russian settlement was burning, and a heavy pall of smoke hung over the old town.

The scared Chinese were hiding from the Japanese troops, who were more or less dead beat.

Bivouacking in the suburbs, the foreign attachés were informed that they could not visit the town owing to the fact that a certain number of the Russian rearguard had intrenched themselves in the centre of the Chinese town and that street fighting was proceeding. This statement was incorrect. Not a shot was fired inside the barricade that day and not a Russian was left except a few deserters hiding in houses and dressed in Chinese clothes.

Russians Sacked Shops.

The Russian settlement was in ruins. The damage to the town itself was not so great from shell fire, but the rearguard of the Tenth Siberian Rifles had sacked all the European shops and many houses of wealthy Chinese before the evacuation. Over fifty Chinese were killed by the Japanese shell fire.

The spoils of war which fell into Japanese hands were quite insignificant when one considers the importance of Liao-Yang as a Russian possession. A certain amount had been destroyed by fire in the settlement, but the Japanese were unable to secure any locomotives, a commodity of which they stand in most urgent need and which would be more valuable to them even than batteries of artillery.

The Japanese divisional commander, who had advanced by the railway line and had secured the bridge over the river, immediately pushed his tired troops forward in an attempt to pursue the enemy, but the pursuit was insignificant, since the Russian rearguard guns were in position and spasmodically shelled the Japanese troops and the town throughout the day.

Kuroki's Apparent Failure.

We could, however, still hear sounds of firing in the direction of Yen-Tai, but it did not appear that Gen. Kuroki's guns were any nearer the Russian communications than when we entered the struggle before Liao-Yang.

It will therefore be safe to speculate that Gen. Kuropatkin has been able to retire with his main army upon Mukden without apprehensions, though it is possible that he may have had to sacrifice a rearguard before Gen. Kuroki to accomplish this concentration.

Anyhow, to judge from the latest information, I believe that a European army corps just about this date reached Mukden, or at least its advance divisions, since I heard of their arrival some days previously at Harbin.

It is impossible to give further information in regard to the fighting north of Liao-Yang, since I found it necessary as soon as the town had been occupied to leave immediately for China in order to send to The Times an account of this great battle.

The Fearful Japanese Losses.

I have already sent you a rough estimate of the Japanese losses. I am convinced that they must have been over 20,000 in our five divisions alone—that is, the Tenth and Fifth Divisions, with Gen. Nodzu, and the Fourth, Third, and Sixth, with Gen. Oku.

There is no need to tell again the story of the horrible spectacles which met one on Liao-Yang plain. I should, however, mention that in the fighting on the plain the Russians were unable to remove their dead, though they succeeded in those

Nor can I correctly estimate the strength of Gen. Kuropatkin's army, but I am inclined to think that the main Russian concentration was against Gen. Kuroki and the Tenth Division, and that we had opposed to our 90,000 or 100,000 men about 60,000, and perhaps 80 guns to our 220.

The Russians had the advantage of position in the first two days, and I should estimate their losses on our front at 50 per cent. below the Japanese, but this estimate is more or less speculative.

Little Good Strategy on Either Side.

Now I come to the more delicate question of criticism. As my information in regard to such an enormous operation must in any circumstances be somewhat incomplete and as the authorities have increased a hundredfold the difficulty of acquiring information, I will not attempt to do more than broadly state one or two opinions.

After what I have read in all the papers of the excellent tactics and strategy of the Japanese I must allow that what I saw in practice did not come up to my expectations. My honest opinion is that there was nothing strategically excellent in the handling of either army. If strategical success has been attained by either belligerent the honors rest with Gen. Kuropatkin, who can declare he has defeated the main object of the Japanese operations.

As to the tactics of the Russians, they obviously cling to the cardinal error of overmanning defensive positions, while the sole spirit of the Japanese tactics, as illustrated by the operations of the divisions under the command of Gen. Oku, was sledge-hammer frontal attacks.

Oku's Marvelous Infantry.

That Gen. Oku commands the finest infantry in the world I am satisfied. I do not believe that any other army could for five consecutive days deliver eight unsuccessful general infantry assaults against intrenchments and still persevere.

Of the cavalry of either belligerent I know nothing, there being no evidence that the mounted branches accomplished anything anywhere in the Liao-Yang campaign.

As to the future course of operations, Gen. Kuropatkin, falling back upon reinforcements from Europe, will probably take a position somewhere on the Harbin road, and the Japanese army, when it reaches Mukden, will have to rest for a time after the terrible severity of the last fortnight's operations.

The Japanese also require to get their railway into full working order, and if the report we receive of the advance of Gen. Linevitch is true it may be necessary for Gen. Kuroki to base himself on the same communications as Gens. Oku and Nodzu.

Thus, even when the railway is in full working order behind the Japanese there will be considerable strain, though the situation is improved by the occupation of Yin-Kow and the use of the Liao River as far as Niu-Chwang City as a subsidiary line of communication.

Correspondents' Perilous Journey.

My personal experiences after this great battle were interesting. After witnessing on Sunday afternoon the occupation of Liao-Yang I rode to the first Russian position, that is, the position described in my telegram as a rocky eminence, and remained there all night.

Early on Monday morning, accompanied by a confrère, I left on horseback, and, riding all day, reached Old Niu-Chwang, which is on a branch of the Liao River.

Toward evening we succeeded in engaging a junk, in which we proceeded down stream all night and till noon the following day, when contrary winds made it necessary to abandon the boat.

My friend and myself thereupon marched on foot the remaining twenty miles to Yin-Kow, where we arrived after dark on Tuesday. We crossed the following morning to the railway station, reaching Shan-hai-Kwan the same evening, your message being on the wires within sixty hours of my leaving the battlefield.

Traveling through the country away from the Japanese communications I noted a splendid harvest. The people were working contentedly in the fields as if the fate of nations were not being decided almost at their doors. Everywhere the people showed civility and friendliness.

On the river we met numbers of junks flying Japanese transport flags and carrying army stores to the Japanese at Old Niu-Chwang, which is now an advanced base.

50,000 FELL IN BATTLE.

Estimate of Casualties on Both Sides—Liao-Yang Strewn with Corpses.

MUKDEN, Sept. 9.—Thousands of wounded are being sent north from here.

A correspondent of The Associated Press who returned here on Wednesday with the Russian rear guard, after having accompanied the army during the whole time since the battle of Liao-Yang, says the losses on both sides were enormous. As a moderate estimate he places them at 50,000.

The correspondent says the fighting at Liao-Yang recalled in fierceness the sanguinary battles of the American civil war. When the Russians left Liao-Yang the town was strewn with bodies of the slain.

The accumulation of wounded between Liao-Yang and Mukden tested to the utmost the resources of the Red Cross. During the five days from Aug. 30 to Sept. 4 12,300 wounded were treated in Red Cross ambulances, the Sisters of Mercy vying with the surgeons in physical courage and resistance to fatigue.

12,000 RUSSIANS IN DESPERATE POSITION

Japanese Are Said to Surround Them on Three Sides.

KUROKI IS HELD IN CHECK

St. Petersburg Thinks Pursuit of Kuropatkin's Army Has Been Given Up, but a Japanese Movement in the West Is Reported.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 10.—The Daily Express says it has trustworthy information that the Russian Army is divided into five columns.

The first has reached Tie-Ling (Tie Pass, forty miles north of Mukden) and is preparing to defend that place against the Japanese. The second is midway between Mukden and Tie Pass. The third is at Mukden.

The fourth, consisting of 40,000 men, under Gen. Meyendorf, is holding Gen. Kuroki in check by hard fighting twelve miles south of Mukden.

The fifth, of about 12,000 men, is further south, exhausted by incessant fighting, and is surrounded on three sides by the Japanese, its position being one of extreme danger, from which it can hardly hope to escape.

"Everything now depends," says the paper, "on Meyendorff's ability to hold Kuroki in check, which so far has been successfully done."

Says Russians Are Demoralized.

SHANGHAI, Sept. 9.—A special messenger from the Tartar General, at Mukden, who escaped from that city through the cordon of Russian outposts, reports, according to advices received here, that the Russian Army is utterly confused and demoralized, especially the remains of the two European army corps which recently joined Gen. Kuropatkin's forces.

BERLIN, Sept. 9.—A dispatch to the Lokal Anzeiger from Mukden, timed 11:40 A. M. to-day, says that the evacuation of Mukden is now in progress and that the Japanese have not yet crossed the River Hun, which flows three miles south of Mukden.

The dispatch further says:

"The Viborg Regiment, of which Emperor William is commander, before advancing to storm the village of Sykwantun Sept. 2, was drawn up in front of the tent of Major von Runckel, the German Military Attaché, and cheered for the German Emperor.

"The regiment in carrying Skywantun lost two officers and fifty men killed and 150 officers and men wounded, including the Colonel of the regiment. It afterward retired in good order."

St. Petersburg Confident.

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, Sept. 10, (1:50 A. M.)—It seems to be definitely established that Field Marshal Oyama's tired troops practically abandoned on Wednesday the attempt to head off Gen. Kuropatkin, and the latter's army has arrived safely at Mukden after frightful experiences in floundering through mud and mire over the Mandarin Road.

Some descriptions of the scenes along the line of retreat are almost incredible. They tell how the men lay down in the mud and slept in a drenching rain and without shelter.

Lieut. Gen. Sakharoff telegraphed yesterday that there was no fighting during Thursday, and a dispatch was received from Viceroy Alexief announcing that the railroad and telegraph between Harbin and Mukden were both uninterrupted.

It is evident that the last determined effort of the Japanese to bring Kuropatkin to bay was made on Tuesday, but the Russian commander in chief faced about, and two corps with artillery beat off the Japanese while the remainder of the troops continued the march to Mukden. After that the Japanese could only hang on to the flanks and try to shell the retreating columns from the hills.

The outposts are still in contact, but they are not even exchanging shots.

The Russians continue to hold Sin-tsin-Tin (sixty-six miles east of Mukden) and Russian cavalry are operating over a wide area east of Mukden to prevent a Japanese column from slipping through and making its way north.

Statement of Losses to be Issued.

A detailed statement of Russian losses is promised by the War Office to-day. It is awaited with intense interest. The general expectation is that the losses will approximate 20,000, as against 30,000 Japanese casualties.

The work of burying the dead was left to the Japanese, who were forced to attempt the task as a matter of self-preservation, but it was almost impossible. The awful rains handicapped the work of cremation, on which the Japanese relied, and only shallow trench burials were possible under the circumstances. Not only is this work of the greatest difficulty, but it is almost valueless from a sanitary point of view, the storms undoing it soon after it is accomplished.

The care of the wounded has taxed the hospitals to the utmost. One correspondent says that over 12,000 wounded had passed through the Mukden hospitals up to Sunday, and only the most severe cases could be attended to by the nurses and surgeons. Many, therefore, had to be left to the rough but well-meant care of their comrades.

The reports that six more army corps are to be mobilized are untrue. As stated in these dispatches, only two corps are mobilizing, and at present there would be no object in mobilizing more than the railroad is able to transport. The present facilities permit the transportation of a little over one corps each month, but this will, it is expected, be increased with the completion of the railroad around Lake Baikal, which will probably be in a few days.

Terrific Rainstorm at Mukden.

MUKDEN, Sept. 9.—This evening around Mukden has ocurred the greatest downpour of rain of the whole campaign, and with it a terrifying accompaniment of thunder and lightning. The greatest difficulty in preventing the cavalry stampeding has been experienced by the double guards, and all the horse lines have been tied. The men are scarcely able to keep their feet around the moving horses, and are singing to quiet them.

All the lower ground is under water, and Chinese boats from the Hun River are navigating many of the roads and some of the streets. This makes little difference to the men who are under canvas; but all others are soaked to the skin, and are sleeping, exhausted, in mud and water, indifferent to the weather if they can snatch much-needed rest.

One advantage is that the rain has entirely checked the movements of the Japanese eastern and southern armies—in fact, quiet reigns over the whole front.

A Japanese army of 40,000, however, has been reported to the west of Mukden.

The Russo-Chinese Bank at Mukden has ben closed and the civil authorities are preparing to leave.

The Russian retreat here has been accomplished without losses and with the precision of a review at Krasnoye Selo. Most of the transport was carried in the roughest kind of two-wheeled carts, but the arrangements for providing the troops with food along the line of retreat worked magnificently.

The Chinese population here has so far been fairly orderly. The Chinese are suffering greatly, and in the villages all around crops, cattle, and poultry have been trodden down and killed. The Russians are endeavoring to pay for all damage, though this is often difficult owing to the rapid shifting of the troops, and the guileless natives are always ready where possible to induce two or more commanders to pay for the same damage.

CRITICISM OF KUROPATKIN.

Many of His Old Admirers Unable to Forgive the Liao-Yang Defeat.

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, Sept. 10.—Now that the battle of Liao-Yang belongs to the domain of history, officers of the General Staff are more disposed to discuss some of the circumstances of the fight, although they still lack specific information, which makes it impossible for them to speak authoritatively on many points.

Gen. Kuropatkin's army at Liao-Yang consisted of 200 battalions, 147 squadrons of cavalry, and 700 guns, approximately 108,000 bayonets, 15,000 sabres, and 10,000 gunners. Portions of two European corps and one Siberian corps had been left at Mukden, and a number of these reserves were brought into the fight.

The size of the Japanese army has not been definitely established, but its actual fighting force is supposed to have had a superiority in numbers of from 50,000 to 60,000 men, and a considerable superiority in artillery.

One of the chief advantages possessed by Oyama, according to the Russian experts, consisted in the greater elasticity in movement and in handling on account of the separation of the three respective armies of Kuroki, Oku, and Nodzu.

Kuropatkin very late also introduced the same system after a fashion when he created the Eastern and Southern Armies under the respective command of Gens. Ivanoff and Zaroubaieff, but these armies had not been acting independently for months, while the Japanese armies had been so acting.

On his arrival at the seat of war Lieut. Gen. Bilderling of the Seventeenth Army Corps took over the command of Gen. Ivanoff, who, though a seasoned and tried commander, familiar with his men, with the field of battle, and with the tactics of the Japanese, had to give way to a man older in years, who possessed none of these advantages.

The change in commanders at such a critical time is considered here to have been extremely unfortunate. Although it is admitted that the Eastern army had to face Kuroki, who has earned a reputation as the most skillful of the Japanese leaders, the poor showing which it made in comparison with the Southern army, under Zaroubaieff, may perhaps be attributed to this change of commanders. The battle might have been won if Bilderling had been able to duplicate in the East the splendid fight which Zaroubaieff made against Oku, but Bilderling was twice repulsed.

It was the second repulse by the Japanese force on the heights at Yen-Tai which induced Kuropatkin to order a retreat, and there are officers of the General Staff who believe that this order was precipitate, holding that if Kuropatkin had followed up the offensive on Sept. 2, leaving to Stakelberg, who arrived at the Yen-Tai mines in time to support Orloff, the task of blocking the sweeping movement, the day might have been saved.

These officers are inclined to believe that, like Napoleon and some others of the world's greatest Generals, Kuropatkin suffered a temporary eclipse of judgment in recalling the army corps which he had launched against Kuroki at Hei-ying-Tai and in ordering a retreat.

As it was, they declare, Kuropatkin's skill reasserted itself and shone brightest in the hour of apparent disaster, when, massing his armies along the branch railroad at Yen-Tai, he held the Japanese in check long enough to enable the southern force to pass him and escape northward.

The subsequent retreat of the Russian Army over the terrible roads in the face of the determined foe is considered a brilliant feat by all, but it is undeniable that Kuropatkin has disappointed many of his old admirers, who are unable to forgive the defeat, and who now recall that Kuropatkin's reputation was made as the chief of Skobeloff's staff, and not as a leader of the army.

They know how carefully the position at Liao-Yang was prepared, and they had been assured that if Kuropatkin accepted battle there he would achieve victory. Instead, they say regretfully, he was outflanked and outgeneraled.

Nevertheless, perhaps with the majority, faith in Gen. Kuropatkin remains unshaken.

MUKDEN, Wednesday, Sept. 7, via PEKING, Sept. 9.—A correspondent of The Associated Press who has just returned to Mukden with the Russian rearguard says Gen. Kuroki's flanking movement east of the Russian position precipitated the retreat from Liao-Yang.

The Japanese shell fire continued until Sept. 4, when the bridges over the Tai-Tse were destroyed. The Russians admit that their positions at Liao-Yang were too extended for their army to hold. The greater portion of the Russian forces crossed the Tai-Tse during the night of Sept. 2 and engaged Gen. Kuroki.

The fighting on the first day was favorable to the Russians, but the condition changed at night time. The Russian infantry suffered heavily from shrapnel and rifle fire. The fighting was continued Sept. 3 and Sept. 4, the Russians successfully protecting the east side of the railroad.

When the Japanese approached Yen-Tai they immediately commenced to attack it. The Russian transport began to retreat at midnight Sept. 4, and was attacked three miles from Yen-Tai on the morning of Sept. 5 along the Mukden road. The Russians pushed out two corps and much artillery to protect their right flank.

The condition of the roads rendered the retreat slow, and the troops and horses were tired out. The Japanese seemed to lack enterprise, and failed to recognize the serious condition of the Russians, the morale of the Russian troops having been severely tried.

Much of the Japanese success is attributed to the millet fields, in which the Russians were not accustomed to manoeuvre.

ALEXIEFF BLAMED FOR DEFEAT.

Russian Papers Want Supreme Control Given to Kuropatkin.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 9.—Some of the Russian papers demand in pretty outspoken fashion the reorganization of the conditions at the front. They demand that untrammeled control be given to Gen. Kuropatkin as Commander-in-Chief, this evidently being aimed at Viceroy Alexieff, who is supposed to be responsible for insisting latterly that the reinforcements go to Vladivostok in view of the probability of early Japanese operations there or at Harbin, thus depriving Kuropatkin of troops which might have turned the scale at Liao-Yang.

The Russ is especially bold, considering the restrictions placed on the Russian press. It declares that numerical superiority is not enough, and that what is needed is some of the do-or-die spirit of the Japanese. The paper quotes Gen. Dragomiroff, ex-Governor General of Kieff, and an authority on military matters, as follows:

"Give me a soldier who is firmly determined to die for his country and I will guarantee that my tactics will be superexcellent. The man who will lay down his life is terrible. A bullet may stop one such man, but it will not stop a company. It is difficult to fight and more difficult to vanquish them."

The Russ continues:

"What we need is an entirely new organization of everything connected directly or indirectly with the military operations. A good deal is admirable, but a good deal also is deplorable. The fact that things have not gone well at the theatre of war may be due to the fact that everything is not directed with a single aim, subservient to a single, undivided will.

"Gen. Kuropatkin, now intrusted with the command of the Manchurian army, should be Commander-in-Chief."

JAPANESE SILENCE OMINOUS.

English Military Critics Think It May Bode Ill for Russians.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 10.—Descriptions of the horrors and privations of the Russian retreat have not yet been printed here, hence the London morning papers comment chiefly on the details of the battle of Liao-Yang. Another day of Japanese silence, however, strikes the military critics here with the suspicion that the lull in action may be ominous for the Russians.

The Daily Chronicle eulogizes Gen. Kuropatkin, declaring that Capt. A. T. Mahan was the first and only military critic to foresee the genius which inspired the strategy of the Russian Commander in Chief.

The Daily Telegraph, in commenting on the full accounts of the battle of Liao-Yang, says it was a struggle "terrible beyond imagination, with a desperation unparalleled in war."

"Henceforth," the paper says, "a new standard of heroism is set in war. The Japanese and Russians alike have shown capacity for sacrifice, contempt for death, and utter abnegation of self in answer to the supreme demand of patriotism which have never yet been excelled."

The paper reads a lesson to the English people, drawn from the battle, which is to the effect that they must be prepared to fight for existence to an extent not even indicated in the South African war, "when an unprecedentedly low rate of casualties was sufficient to induce the British armies to abandon attack and acknowledge failure. These lessons have already been wiped out by the lessons of a far greater war."

Every development in Manchuria, according to The Daily Telegraph, emphasizes the division of the peoples of the world into "the hard and the soft." In view of the latest dispatches, The Daily Telegraph declares that Kuropatkin completely foiled Oyama's strategy, but that "Russian and Japanese capacity of sacrifice for an idea has restored the sense of heroism which redeems even the horrors of war, ennobles armies, and strengthens nations."

RUSSIAN REFORMERS ACTIVE.

Incendiary Proclamations, Printed in London, Distributed Broadcast.

ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday, Sept. 10.—Intense activity is being displayed by some anti-Russian revolutionary organization abroad. It seems that they have united in an effort to appeal to all the discontented classes of the Russian population.

Incendiary proclamations have been smuggled across the border and distributed broadcast in the towns and cities, especially in Polish and Jewish centres. They call upon the population to take advantage of the Government's preoccupation owing to the war to rise against the authorities and overthrow the autocracy.

Such a propaganda in Russia always results in an increase of violence. The proclamations are addressed to the Jews in particular, but the appeals are made to all the heterodox sects and to workmen and Socialists, and a new feature is that special appeals are made to the soldiers and peasants.

Many of the proclamations have been seized, and it has been proved that they were printed in London.

Until now they have met with little response in Russia proper, but there have been several manifestations in various places in Poland and Southwestern Russia, where the population is largely Jewish. The largest demonstration, it is understood, took place at Grodno, Poland, 500 persons participating in it.

The Ministry of the Interior seemingly does not attach great importance to the proclamations, and the reports which have been received indicate that the people have not been stirred up by them.

The demonstrations, according to the Ministry of the Interior, have been small affairs and easily suppressed without violence. Nevertheless, the attempts to inflame the people when the country is being severely tried by reverse in the theatre of war are naturally more or less disquieting.

The Ministry of the Interior says no reports of the alleged extensive anti-Jewish disturbances in several of the Governments of Southwest Russia have been received. The only recent disturbance, it is stated, was a small affair at Biela, near Kieff, in which no one was killed.

Russia to Indemnify Shipowners.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 9.—The Government has agreed to indemnify the owners of the British colliers Ettrickdale and Frankby, which were captured by Russian torpedo boat destroyers in February last and brought to Libau, where they were leased by order of Emperor Nicholas.

CONFESSES TO COLORADO DYNAMITE OUTRAGE

Deported Colored Miner Implicates Twelve Other Men.

IS UNDER ARREST AT TOPEKA

Says He Helped to Place Explosive That Killed Fifteen Non-Union Miners at Independence Station.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 9.—"I was with the men who blew up the depot at Independence, Col., on June 5, thereby killing eleven men and severely wounding nine others," is the confession made to Sheriff Lucas and County Attorney Hungate by R. H. Slagel, alias Robert Romaine, who was recently arrested here for burglary.

Slagel mentions Foster, McKinney, Davis, Kennison, Jim Hicks, and Carl Nelson, all miners, as being connected with the explosion, but the officials will not divulge the names of half a dozen others, members of the union, who took a prominent part in the plot to wreck the Independence Railroad Station. It is explained that the publication of these names would defeat a plan for the apprehension of several of them.

Slagel's confession was taken down in shorthand. He recounted the crime in all of its details. He told how the dynamite under the depot was connected by concealed wires to a chair in a room about 500 feet away. A pistol was attached to the end of the wire directly under the charge of dynamite. In the distant room the other end of the wire was fastened to the rung of a chair.

The chair was pulled backward, thereby exploding the pistol and the dynamite.

Slagel, who was a member of the Miners' Union, was sitting in the room with others when the train pulled up to the station with its load of non-union miners. He saw two of his friends, union men, in the crowd on the platform, and wanted to go out and warn them.

As he turned to leave the room, he says, some one struck him on the head with a revolver and stunned him until he revived only after the shock of the explosion. Slagel had considerable difficulty in escaping from Colorado. He was held under suspicion by the Miners' Union through his attempt to go out and warn his friends, and by the military authorities as well. He finally made his way to Topeka, where he had formerly lived.

He says he was regularly initiated as a member of the union and received a card.

Shortly after Slagel's arrest a Deputy Sheriff from Telluride came here to investigate. It was believed he was aware Slagel knew something about the dynamiting at Independence. Slagel told about the crime to Under Sheriff Betts, but did not mention that he had anything to do with it. His knowledge of the arrangements of the wires and the dynamite was so complete, however, that he was forced to make a clean breast of the whole affair.

Slagel gave the names of the others so far as he was able to remember.

Several arrests on the charge have been made in Colorado, but they are known to be of the wrong men.

He also told the officials about the details of laying wires in different shafts of the Vindicator mines and how the explosion there was caused.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Col., Sept. 9.—Sheriff Bell said to-day of Slagel or Romaine:

"We know positively that Romaine worked in the district while the strike was in progress and was a spy employed by the Western Federation of Miners. He had long been under suspicion."

The men whom Romaine implicates with himself are said to be former officers and members of miners' unions in this district. Only one of them, believed to be Charles O. Kennison, former President of the Miners' Union No. 40, Cripple Creek, is now in the district. Kennison is in the county jail charged with murder and conspiracy to murder in connection with the Independence depot explosion.

CANYON CITY, Col., Sept. 9.—Robert Romaine was sentenced to the State penitentiary from Pueblo for burglary in March, 1901, for two to four years. He was discharged in July, 1903. He was born at Hamburg, Germany, and at the time he entered the prison was twenty-five years of age.

BETON AS BUILDING MATERIAL.

With Concrete It Is Replacing Stone and Brick in Germany.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—It is predicted in Germany that beton will be the building material of the future. United States Consul John E. Kehl writes from Stettin that the claim is made for it that it is the least susceptible to fire of all materials now used for building purposes, is cheap, and is very durable. Concrete and beton are rapidly replacing stone and brick in all kinds of building work, particularly for foundations, sewers, bridges, and pillars.

The years 1902-3 were the worst that German cement manufacturers have ever experienced. The cement syndicate formed for the purpose of controlling prices went to pieces in 1902, which event was followed by a general cut in prices, for the purpose of getting rid of a large surplus. The demand from the United States was only fair during the early part of 1903. During the last quarter of the year the export from Stettin dropped to less than one-third of the amount exported during the same quarter of 1902.

Cement works are now turning their attention to the manufacture of artificial stones for building purposes. The facade of a Government building just completed in Stettin is of artificial stone, and private dwellings and flat buildings are being embellished with figures and designs of artificial stone.

Find No Record of Passes for Brown.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Sept. 9.—The case of the People against John J. Brown, President of the Village of White Plains, was heard this afternoon. Mr. Brown is accused of having violated the law which forbids public officials using passes on railroads. Senator Chauncey Depew of the New York Central, who was the first witness, said he had been able to find no record of a pass having been issued to Mr. Brown. Officers of other railroads gave similar testimony and the hearing was adjourned so that the passbooks may be examined.

BRITISH AGRICULTURE.

All but a Very Small Portion of the Surface Is Utilized.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—United States Consul Stephens writes from Plymouth, England, as follows:

"The report for 1903 on the acreage and production of crops and the number of live stock in Great Britain has just been published by the Board of Agriculture.

"Of the 56,675,000 acres which form Great Britain, exclusive of foreshore and tidal water, over 32,225,000 acres are under crops and grass and 12,675,000 acres are accounted for as being mountain and heather land used for grazing, while 2,675,000 acres are occupied by woods and plantations, and 500,000 acres are covered by inland waters. Only 16 per cent. of the surface remains to be accounted for. A portion of this, the report says, is not susceptible of cultivation; some of it is in small holdings not included in the annual returns, and still more of it is used for residential, commercial, industrial, and recreative purposes.

"It will be observed, therefore, that all but a comparatively small portion of the surface of the island is utilized. Much more of it would be used were it not for the present land laws. There is a tendency to reduce the number of large farms. The average English holding varies in different counties, from 123 acres in Northumberland to 45 acres in Cornwall. The reduction in the area of land under the plow in Great Britain, which has continued annually since 1875, with only three slight checks, still continues.

"Last year a further withdrawal of 172,000 acres from cultivation was recorded. In this district there are many thousands of acres of splendid land which the people would be glad to cultivate, and for which they would pay, if allowed, reasonable rentals, but their offers are refused, and the wide tracts of land are kept by the lords for hunting grounds.

"Although many farmers no longer find it profitable to devote a large part of their holdings to wheat or barley, they grow oats, the land devoted to which last year increased by 83,000 acres. Oats now cover more than one-fifth of the total arable area of Great Britain, the area under oats being only 300,000 acres less than that under wheat and barley combined.

"Grass land now includes nearly 17,000,000 acres, exclusive of 13,000,000 acres returned as mountain and heather land used for grazing. In England and Wales the increase was general, and in some counties, notably Devon, Gloucester, and Wiltshire, it was considerable.

"The increase in pasture land has been followed by the augmentation of the number of cattle by 140,000 head during the year. In every county in England except Derby an increase was recorded. Devon and Somerset show an appreciable augmentation. The number of sheep declined in England but increased in Wales. In Devon the number was very high.

"The report speaks of the unpopularity of English wheat, which has sold at about fifteen cents a bushel less than foreign wheat. No doubt its cultivation will decline. Its quality is inferior. There was also a fall in the price of barley and oats last year, which brought heavy losses to many farmers.

"It is often contended that the agriculturist should devote himself to supplying the country with butter, of which 200,000 tons are imported yearly from other countries. Even Iceland and Greenland now appear among the countries providing England with butter, while Russia alone contributes more than a third of the total number of eggs imported into Great Britain."

MASSACRED BY RUSSIANS.

Report That Raiding Party Slew Japanese Women and Children.

TOKIO, Sept. 9.—A private telegram received here says that a small Russian expedition from Kamchatka visited Senshu Island, and in the absence of the men killed the women and children and burned the houses.

Official confirmation is lacking in regard to this report, which seems incredible.

According to dispatches from Tokio, the steamship Tsichi Maru, a vessel of ninety-nine tons, visited Kamchatka at the beginning of August and sent twelve men in a boat to procure water. The Japanese were fired upon by the Russian soldiers on shore. Seven were killed and five, of whom three died afterward, were wounded.

A few days later a similar attack on Japanese fishermen off Kamchatka was reported. Several Japanese, it was said, were killed.

Russian Deserters Deported.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Three Russian army deserters arrived here to-day without funds or passports and were sent back to Canada. Several others who entered here, and who are now working as farm hands, came well supplied with money. One Russian, who is still wearing a part of his army uniform, said that he deserted with an entire outpost of fifty men.

WABASH BUYS COAL TRADE.

Takes Over Pittsburg Railroad with All Its Commercial Interests.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 9.—One of the most important railroad deals ever consummated affecting Pittsburg was closed to-day in New York, when the Wabash interests, for the sum of $12,000,000, purchased the Pittsburg Terminal Railroad and Coal Company, the West Side Belt Road, and its branches, including all the associated companies of the coal company.

The purchase covers 15,000 acres of coal in fee simple, 1,000 acres surface land, 7 mines, and 36 miles of railroad, with valuable terminals in Pittsburg and Clairton. The present output of the property is 3,000,000 tons per annum, and the deal gives the Wabash the advantage of an immense tonnage for immediate haul and entrance into all the iron tonnage producing mills of Pittsburg.

The deal which has been under consideration for a long time was finally closed to-day by Winslow S. Pierce, E. T. Jeffrey, and Joseph Ramsay, Jr., representing the Wabash, and by Charles Donnelly, William Flinn, and F. F. Nicola, representing the Pittsburg Terminal and Coal Company.

RACE NARROWING DOWN; SHEPARD NOW IN LEAD

Democratic Managers Favor Lamont's Suggestion.

JEROME HAS SUPPORTERS

Tammany, However, Would Be Against Him—Opposition to Goodyear on Account of His Irregularity.

With the definite announcement from Daniel S. Lamont that he would under no circumstances accept the nomination for Governor, there was a general drift yesterday toward Edward M. Shepard, as the Democratic standard-bearer, with Charles W. Goodyear of Buffalo as a more or less remote possibility. District Attorney Jerome was also mentioned, but it was learned from a high source in Tammany Hall that the organization would oppose him.

Practically the only opposition to Mr. Shepard comes from Senator Patrick H. McCarren in Mr. Shepard's own county. McCarren is working hard for the nomination of Controller Edward M. Grout. Such opposition as this, it was said, would not do Mr. Shepard any real harm and might aid his candidacy. There is a strong likelihood that the fifteen delegates from the five Kings County districts which went against McCarren in the recent primaries may evade the unit rule by keeping out of the Kings County caucus and then present the name of Shepard. By this course alone could the name of Mr. Shepard be placed before the convention by his own county.

Now that Col. Lamont is out of it both Chairman Meyer of the State Committee and Mr. Sheehan of the National Executive Committe are inclined to adopt his suggestion in regard to Mr. Shepard. While Col. Lamont also spoke highly of Goodyear the party managers are not inclined to regard him as being as strong as the Brooklynite.

In the first place, Mr. Goodyear has been away from his party for many years in local as well as State and National campaigns. While the party managers do not believe that any one should be eliminated for having opposed the party in recent Presidential campaigns, they think it would be impolitic at this time to nominate a man who has opposed his party in local as well as National campaigns, beginning with 1896. Mr. Shepard, on the other hand, it is pointed out, opposed Mr. Bryan in 1896, but at once came back to his party, and since has supported all State and local candidates, with the single exception of 1897, when he supported Seth Low for Mayor.

The Jerome talk, which was heard to a considerable extent yesterday, came from up-State Democrats, who asserted that the District Attorney would arouse great enthusiasm, and by making campaign against corruption in Albany along the same lines that Circuit Attorney Joseph W. Folk is following in his campaign for Governor of Missouri would pile up an enormous vote. The word was then passed along from Tammany sources that the Wigwam would oppose the nomination of Jerome, but at the same time it was said that the nomination either of Shepard or Goodyear would be perfectly agreeable to the organization. While the general drift is conceded to be toward Shepard, the friends of ex-Senator David B. Hill yesterday were still standing loyally by the candidacy of John B. Stanchfield.

SAY GOOD WORD FOR SHEPARD.

National Democracy Committee Members Talk Over Candidates.

A conference of the State Committee of the Independent or National Democracy was held yesterday in the office of John De Witt Warner, 54 William Street. There were present Robert A. Widenmann, Chairman; Calvin Tomkins, Secretary; Simeon Holroyd of Albany, John De Witt Warner, and others. After the meeting Mr. Widenmann said:

"Our conference was mainly on our duty under present conditions—the greater part of the queries and suggestions we have received being as to how we might aid to assure such nominations for Governor and other State officers as should fitly represent the Democrats of this State and aid the National canvass. After discussion it seemed to us that there now appeared no adequate reason for calling our State Committee together—at whose last full meeting, by the way, Judge Parker was indorsed for Chief Judge, to which office he was then elected.

"The more prominent candidates for Governor now are Mr. Grout and Mr. Shepard of Brooklyn, Mr. Lamont of this city and Mr. Goodyear of Buffalo. Our organization is committeed to none of these, but there seems, especially from up-State, a strong feeling for Mr. Shepard.

"As to judicial candidates, we find difference of opinion; all of our people from whom we have heard being strong for Cullen, and many [without personal preference for Mr. Werner] assuming that he should also be named, in deference to the idea of a non-partisan judiciary. On the other hand, there are many who, though favoring this idea, in view of Judge Werner's record, do not consider his personality a favorable one in which to embody it.

"Our people to a man believe that an aggressive tariff reform campaign should be made."

SCULPTOR'S ROOSEVELT JOKE.

Labels Bust of the President, "The Apostle of Peace."

There came into the rooms of the Republican State Committee at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday a man who carried under his arm a plaster bust of President Roosevelt.

"I think," he said, "that if the Republican State Committee would order a few thousand copies of this bust, to be placed on exhibition, it would be most helpful to the candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt."

He placed the bust on the mantel, and Secretary Little walked up to look it over at close range. At the base was this inscription in large letters:

"The Apostle of Peace, Arbitration Is Better Than Bayonets."

When Secretary Little recovered from his swoon the sculptor had gone. There is an impression that it was all a fiendish joke of Chairman Tom Taggart of the Democratic National Committee.

WEST VIRGINIANS HOPEFUL.

Democratic Leader Says They're Watching for Illegal Voting.

W. E. Chilton of West Virginia, who has served as Secretary of State there, and who was Chairman of the Democratic State Committee in the campaign of 1892 when the State was carried for Cleveland, was a caller at National Committee Headquarters yesterday. Mr. Chilton is the law partner of ex-Gov. William A. McCorkle.

"While West Virginia must be considered a debatable State," said Mr. Chilton, "there are many good reasons for believing we shall carry it in November. The platform and the candidates of our party are very acceptable to our people and ex-Senator Davis for many years has been one of the most popular men in the State. The principal thing we shall have to fight is the tendency of the Republicans to poll illegal votes, especially among the negroes, but I believe we shall be able to overcome this with the precautions we are taking for vigilance."

PARKER'S HANDS OFF.

Not to Come Out for Cullen or Any One Else for Governor.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, ESOPUS, Sept. 9.—Reports have been flying thick and fast that Judge Parker wants Chief Judge Cullen nominated for Governor by the Democrats. As a matter of fact, the Presidential nominee has not the slightest intention of coming out for any man. The complications which would arise if Cullen should be nominated for Governor would be such that Rosemount would have no desire at this time to precipitate them.

Any reports appearing in New York or elsewhere that Judge Parker is intending to move his working quarters from here to New York or elsewhere because of his inaccessibility to the rank and file and the leaders of the Democratic Party can be regarded as unfounded. The Presidential nominee is devoid of any such intention at this time. Neither has it possessed him.

He may, and very likely will, visit New York occasionally during the campaign and consult with leaders there. But he will have no headquarters except at Esopus.

The coming together here to-day of Justice Edward E. McCall of Manhattan and William Buckley, one of the counsel of the New York Life Insurance Company, who represents the company in Albany during the legislative session, served to cause all sorts of speculation. This, from the fact that the Justice's brother, John A. McCall, came out so recently for the election of President Roosevelt.

But neither the New York Justice nor Mr. Buckley would give any information as to the purpose of their visit. Judge Parker was equally reticent.

Judge Denis O'Brien, elected last November by both Republicans and Democrats, also came to Rosemount to-day. Like the other visitors, the purpose of his pilgrimage did not become apparent. That it was political in any way was not conceded at the house on the hill.

The presence of William G. Rice, candidate of the Democrats of Albany for Mayor against Charles H. Gaus last Fall and Secretary to David B. Hill when the latter was Governor, led to the belief that perhaps the Albany leader was using Rice as his commissioner to Rosemount. Not an iota of information was vouchsafed.

Few in Albany stand closer to Mr. Hill than Rice. Any idea that the ex-Senator would not be welcome at all times at Rosemount can be put away, incidentally, whether Rice came here as Hill's emissary or not.

THE "PRIVATE PARK" ISSUE.

Up in the Adirondacks It's a Political Question.

Special to The New York Times.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Political issues in the Adirondacks vary somewhat from those elsewhere, and their present complexion is not favorable to the Republican Party. This is a stronghold of Republicanism, but the present issues are severely testing party loyalty.

Foremost if not gravest of these is the Rockefeller Post Office issue. The Post Office at Brandon has been removed by the Roosevelt Administration to Bay Pond, solely for the personal convenience of William Rockefeller.

It vastly inconveniences the villagers, who have not only to tramp to Bay Pond for their mail, but are obliged to trespass on Mr. Rockefeller's "private park" or go without it. The popularity of "private parks" with residents of the Adirondacks closely resembles the affection entertained for bull terriers by Maltese cats, and this fresh aggravation, coming from the Federal Administration, is infuriating to the local population. Even Republicans who voted for Lincoln use boiling language as they travel across the "private park" to get their letters.

Aside from this, the "private park" is itself an issue in the Adirondacks. The Adirondack Republicans who have been deprived of the ancient privilege of catching the fish placed in the streams by the State or hunting the wild deer are becoming heretical on the party faith. The few wealthy men who are fencing in the Adirondacks for "private parks" are mostly Republicans, and besides that the local mountaineer has somehow got it in his head that Republican policies are largely responsible for monopoly.

A third issue is the local coal situation. The mountain Democrats allege that the coal dealers in this place is allowed by the railroad company to sell on commission only, the company supplying the coal. The price of a ton is $8, as against $7.50 at the height of the coal strike. But what irritates the Adirondack public is that a ton of coal here is partly composed of dirt.

It is significant that many life-long Republicans are dropping the Republican county papers and subscribing for Democratic organs. The outlook is that this Republican stronghold will have some surprises in November.

PAYN'S MEN FOR ROOSEVELT.

His Own Senatorial District Pledges Loyalty Under His Direction.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Sept. 9.—If any further proof was needed that Field Marshal Louis F. Payn of Chatham and President Roosevelt have smoked the pipe of peace it was furnished to-day when the Republican Senatorial Convention for the Twenty-fourth New York District passed resolutions indorsing the Administration of President Roosevelt and stating that his sterling qualities of mind and character well qualify him for the position of President.

The support of the Counties of Columbia, Dutchess, and Putnam was pledged to President Roosevelt. Mr. Payn did not attend the convention, but directed its proceedings from his room in the Nelson House, near by.

Henry S. Ambler of Chatham, Columbia County, was renominated for Senator. The convention indorsed the two administrations of Gov. Odell and pledged the faith of the Republican Party in the honesty of the Governor. The Republicans of the Second Dutchess District have nominated August B. Gray for the Assembly.

Fairbanks in Jersey City To-night.

Senator Fairbanks has been selected to open the campaign in five States—New Jersey, West Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. He will speak at Jersey City to-night, at Saratoga on Wednesday next, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the Republican Party, and at Elmira on Thursday evening. The West Virginia campaign will open with a big Republican rally at Parkersburg on Saturday of next week.

Roosevelt League Meetings.

The National Roosevelt League will hold two mass meetings, one in Cooper Union and one possibly at the Clermont Rink in Brooklyn. The Cooper Union Hall has been secured for the last week in October, when Senator Fairbanks and Representative Richard Bartholdt of Missouri will be the main speakers.

Tammany Meeting for Brooklyn.

On behalf of Tammany Hall, Deputy Fire Commissioner William A. Doyle has arranged to hold a meeting at Prospect Hall, South Brooklyn, next Saturday night, with Representative W. Bourke Corcoran as the leading speaker of the evening. In planning the meeting Doyle has not consulted with the McCarren campaign managers. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Seventh District Democratic Association, of which district Doyle is leader.

Judge Had a Promising Boom for a Few Hours.

TAFT REFUSES NOMINATION

Sends Telegram That Name Must Not Be Used—Odell Still Says Convention Will Be Open.

Judge William E. Werner of Rochester had a promising boom for the Republican nomination for Governor for a few hours yesterday. It was said by those well informed that Gov. Odell, having concluded that ex-Chief Judge Andrews of Syracuse was too old to be available, had picked out Judge Werner in the event that anything went wrong with the Higgins boom.

By nightfall, however, Judge Werner appeared to be out of it, and Lieut. Gov. Higgins was again a favorite. Whatever strength the Henry W. Taft boom had was exploded last evening when Gov. Odell received a telegram from Mr. Taft, who is at Murray Bay, Canada, saying that under no circumstances should his name be presented to the convention.

The Werner boom did not create any great amount of enthusiasm. Politicians offered the argument against it that the nomination of Judge Werner for Governor would necessitate the selection of some other Republican Supreme Court Judge to run for Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals, and would weaken Gov. Odell's argument for a non-partisan judiciary ticket. They thought the Cullen-Werner ticket the best card Odell could play and didn't want to see it broken up.

Ex-Gov. Frank S. Black launched the Werner boom after an hour's conference with Gov. Odell. It was learned later that the availability of Judge Werner was not original with Mr. Black. He had learned during his conference with Gov. Odell that Judge Werner was the man whom Gov. Odell and his friends have been thinking of springing in the event of difficulty in securing a caucus indorsement of Higgins.

Gov. Odell will leave for Saratoga to-day. He reiterated last night that the convention would be open. The way the politicians interpreted the Governor's talk about an open convention was that the Governor meant that nobody except himself would know definitely what was to be done until the delegates heard from him at Saratoga.

Col. Michael J. Dady, who has charge of the boom of Timothy L. Woodruff, was a caller at the rooms of Gov. Odell yesterday. He talked optimistically of Woodruff's chances. Col. Dady will leave for Saratoga to-morrow, and will marshal the Woodruff forces on Sunday. Mr. Woodruff will go up with Senator Platt on Monday.

Declarations by friends of Senator Platt that if Senator Nathaniel A. Elsberg received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor he would be cut at the polls because he voted against Senator Platt, led to the announcement by Elsberg's friends that he and Senator Platt had made up at Chicago during the National Convention. The antagonism of the Platt men apparently has lessened the chance of Senator Elsberg. The men whom the Odell followers were talking of for second place last night were Job Hedges, Julius Mayer, and M. Linn Bruce. When Gov. Odell gets to Saratoga he is likely to hear more about Mr. Bruce's availability than that of any other candidate. It is well known that a majority of the Republican district leaders in New York County favor Mr. Bruce, who was formerly Chairman of the Republican County Committee, and the sentiment of the country delegations, it is said, will be largely in his favor. If Gov. Odell should rule Mr. Bruce out, the second choice of the up-State delegates would be Job Hedges.

FIFTY DOUBTFUL DISTRICTS.

Chairman Cowherd Discusses Progress of Congressional Campaign.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Chairman Cowherd expresses the opinion that about fifty Congressional districts are in the doubtful list. Chairman Babcock has estimated that there are seventy. Mr. Cowherd says that the twenty additional in Mr. Babcock's list are evenly divided between the two parties. According to him, the control of the House will go to the party that can carry a majority of the fifty districts that he regards as debatable.

"We are limiting the distribution of our documents to those that can go out under the Government frank," said Mr. Cowherd to-day. "We now have ten pamphlets for distribution, and we shall issue two more, and possibly still others as the campaign advances. The ones now in press are by Representative Wade of Iowa on trusts, and by Representative Van Duzer of Nevada on irrigation.

"Mr. Wade criticises the Administration for its lack of vigor in the prosecution of the trusts and calls attention to the fact that Congress appropriated $500,000 as a special fund for the prosecution of the trusts and the Administration has expended only $25,000 of the amount. Mr. Van Duzer's speech shows that Senator Newlands of his State was the real autnor of the Irrigation act, and that the Democrats voted more solidly than did the Republicans in bringing about its passage. We expect these two documents will be very serviceable in correcting some impressions that have been spread by the Republicans.

"This campaign undoubtedly has been very slow in starting on both sides. Our speaking campaign cannot be said to have begun up to the present time.

"There has been no particular reason for this delay aside from the general tendency to make each campaign a little shorter than the one that preceded it. Many of the States encourage this by the dates they fix for the making of nominations for members of Congress."

KINGS DELEGATES CHOSEN.

Little Friction Apparent in the Twenty-one Democratic Conventions.

With little or no friction anywhere, the Democrats of Brooklyn held conventions last night in each of the twenty-one Assembly districts of the borough, and elected delegates to the State Convention at Saratoga.

In sixteen of the districts men friendly to Senator McCarren were selected, while anti-McCarren delegations were named in the five districts controlled by the Doyle-Shevlin-Tammany combination. The list of delegates from the county is not adorned by many new names. James Shevlin, who was the heir apparent in Willoughby Street before McCarren overthrew the reigning house, will go from the Eleventh District, while McCarren will head the delegates from the Fourteenth. William A. Doyle, of course, goes from the Seventh. The name of Hugh McLaughlin does not appear on the list, but it is understood that Mr. McLaughlin did not care for the honor this Fall. Neither does that of John L. Shea, erstwhile "the Demosthenes of the auction room."

To Make Fight at Saratoga.

Representative Douglas yesterday made arrangements for the delegates elected at the bolting convention in the Nineteenth Assembly District to go to Saratoga and fight for seats in the State Convention.

WON'T UNITE WITH ADDICKS.

Delaware Regular Republicans Reject Harmony Plan.

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 9.—The Regular Republican State Committee held a meeting here to-day and authorized Senator Ball, State Chairman, to send a reply to Senator Allee, Chairman of the Union Republican State Committee, virtually refusing the proffer of the Addicks faction for harmony and the consequent selection of one Republican State ticket.

The proposition of Allee was that the Union Republicans would accord to the Regulars all of the nominations except Governor, State Treasurer, and Insurance Commissioner.

DAVIS HERE TO-MORROW.

Ex-Senator Talks to Gorman and Will Confer with Taggart.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 9.—The Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency, Henry G. Davis, stopped off here to-day. He had a conference with Senator Gorman at the Hotel Rennert, and later visited some of his personal friends in the city.

Mr. Davis intends to leave here for New York City to-morrow to have a conference with National Chairman Taggart and other Democratic leaders. Mr. Davis was a guest of Charles E. Ford at Ford's Grand Opera House to-night.

VERMONT PLEASES ROOSEVELT.

He Congratulates Republicans and Says Result Is Admirable.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Sept. 9.—The following communication from President Roosevelt was received by mail to-day by Secretary Alfred E. Watson of the Republican State Committee:

My Dear Mr. Watson: I heartily congratulate you and your fellow-Republicans in Vermont. The result is admirable in every way. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

GOES TO COURT OVER WAGER.

An aftermath of the fight for the leadership of the south side of the Thirty-fourth Assembly District will be aired in the civil courts as the result of the payment of a wager between followers of Percival F. Nagle, the defeated aspirant for the leadership, and his successful competitor, John F. Cowan.

John Hart, who backed Nagle to win, has caused a summons to issue from the Ninth Municipal Court against William Kulpze, a bartender, who held the stakes in the wager of $102, even, which Hart made with John Hogan.

The day after the primaries Kulpze paid over the money to Hogan on demand. Later Hart demanded the return of the money, but Kulpze could only say that Cowan had been declared the winner and that he had paid over the money to Hogan, who had backed the successful candidate.

Now Hart seeks to recover the money by civil process. Considerable interest attaches to the suit, as it is said that between $8,000 and $10,000 in bets is tied up.

MUSTN'T CRITICISE WORLD'S FAIR.

Order Against Derogatory Remarks Issued to Jefferson Guards.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 9.—The following order was issued to-day for the Jefferson Guards:

"Members must not criticise the Fair, its management, any special exhibit or show, or any officer, civil or military, connected with the Fair, at any time, or to anybody whatsoever. No words or speech derogatory to anybody or anything will be permitted."

CHAIRMAN BABCOCK AS A TARIFF REFORMER

Democrats Reproducing Old Views of Republican Manager.

ND OF GOV. CUMMINS, TOO

I Maintain," Said Babcock, "That It Is a Part of Protection to Protect the Consumers."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—It is proposed by the Democratic managers to reproduce the utterances of Representative Babcock of Wisconsin, Chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, in defense of the bill introduced by him in the Fifty-sixth Congress and which provided for reducing certain duties on manufactures of iron and steel and the abolition of others. In the Summer of 1901 Mr. Babcock was in Europe, and while at Marienbad, Austria, wrote to a friend in Milwaukee a letter in which he defended his bill for reducing duties and claimed that "it is a part of the policy of protection to protect the consumer."

Said Mr. Babcock in the letter alluded to: "In introducing the bill I sought to cover such articles as are manufactured cheaper in the United States than in any other country. The theory of Republican protection is and has been to build up our own institutions by protecting labor and material, so that in the end we might as a nation become industrially, as well as politically, independent of the world.

"By the practice of this Republican policy we are to-day making not only all that we consume of many commodities, but also are able to manufacture some for less than any other people. So it has come to pass that some articles, the like of which years ago we imported nearly all we consumed, we can to-day produce and undersell the world.

"After we have builded so well, and many of these industries have become giants such as the world has never before known, shall we continue a tariff on articles that yield no revenue, need no protection, and that, in fact, like the products of our farms, are articles of export?

"How can such a policy be defended? If Congress maintains a tariff on such articles the whole theory of protection falls to the ground, and it simply inures to the benefit of those who may secure the control of any such commodity, since by its aid they can fix exorbitant prices in the domestic market.

"I maintain that it is a part of the policy of protection to protect the consumers."

At the opening of the reciprocity conference in Detroit, Mich., in December, 1902, Gov. Cummins of Iowa delivered a speech which also will be reproduced by the Democrats for circulation in the campaign. What Gov. Cummins said on that occasion in favor of reciprocity will have especial interest for Senator Lodge and those Massachusetts Republicans who do not agree with that Senator's peculiar plan for promoting reciprocity.

"There is a spirit abroad in some quarters," said Gov. Cummins, "which condemns a reciprocal treaty without regard to the advantages it tenders, if it be found that any home industry, however insignificant, may be injuriously affected by it. If this spirit is to continue and to prevail, reciprocity may as well be abandoned, and the country left to choose between the unalterable schedules of the highest possible protective tariff and the disastrous consequences of absolute free trade.

"Little or nothing can be accomplished until we are willing to approach tariff schedules in precisely the same spirit we approach any other subject of legislation. So long as the controlling minds of Congress insist that the welfare of the country demands that the tariff be let alone, there is no hope for practical or substantial reciprocity.

"There are duties, notably in the iron and steel schedule, although not confined to it, which are absolutely indefensible, which no man will ever attempt to defend, and which are as much at war with the real object of protection as free trade itself. They can be greatly reduced, and still the American manufacturer will occupy the whole American market, pay the highest American wages, and be rewarded with an ample American profit; and therefore they ought to be reduced, not years hence, but now.

"There are materials which our experience has shown us should be admitted free, simply because they would give our people more work to do in preparing them for their ultimate uses, and it should be done not years hence, but now.

"What evidence is there to sustain the assertion that a correction of the grossly excessive duties would hasten the day of extreme commercial activity to a close? None whatever, save the criers who want to be let alone, but who ought not to be let alone, repeated by a coterie of statesmen who have become imbued with the calm philosophy of the citizen of Arkansas who refused to mend his roof in dry weather because it was unnecessary, and did not mend it when it rained because it was impossible."

Referring to such arguments as are employed by Senator Lodge against reciprocity, Gov. Cummins said:

"It will help us to look this proposition in the eye. The time has gone by when we can satisfy ourselves or the people with mellifluous phrases concerning reciprocity.

"If it is intended to employ the doctrine only in those instances in which we can get something and give nothing, it is but an idle dream, and we might as well eliminate the word from our platform and expunge it from the literature of political economy."

EDHELM HAD HEART TROUBLE.

Friend Says He Complained Before Going to Larchmont Station.

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., Sept. 9.—The funeral of Erik Lars Didrik Edhelm, who was killed by a train last evening, will be held to-morrow afternoon at St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church in this place. His relatives and friends are further convinced that Edhelm did not commit suicide by a statement of J. D. Horner, a fellow-member of the Larchmont Yacht Club, that an attack of heart disease caused the man to throw up his hands and fall in front of the locomotive.

Mr. Horner says that shortly before the tragedy Mr. Edhelm had complained of a pain in the heart as they were sitting on the club piazza. Mr. Horner said also that he had learned that Edhelm boarded a Mamaroneck car, which carried him a short distance beyond the station before he realized that it did not go there.

Mrs. Edhelm, it was learned to-day, stepped from a train from New York just in time to see her husband's as yet unidentified body borne into the baggage room. In answer to her question a railroad man told her that the dead man had probably been a tramp.

"Poor fellow!" she exclaimed, as she entered her carriage.

Bomb on Car Track Injures Child.

Passengers on a Douglass Street trolley car were badly frightened last evening when a bomb placed on the track in Liberty Avenue, near Thatford Street, East New York, by a boy, was exploded. A fragment of the bomb badly injured three-year-old Freda Mappel of 3 Thatford Avenue, who was playing near by. A gash was made in her leg, and as she fell she injured her head.

Wife Saved Him from Suicide.

William Cornell of 334 West Nineteenth Street attempted suicide in the presence of his wife last night by drinking carbolic acid. She gave him a glass of milk, this, according to the doctor, saving his life. He was taken a prisoner to the New York Hospital. He will recover.

TWICE ACCUSED, GOES FREE.

Edward Graham, twenty-seven years old, of 2,318 Lexington Avenue, charged with stealing a pocketbook from John B. Hopper of Mount Vernon, in the Grand Central Station Wednesday, was positively identified in the Yorkville Court yesterday by Dr. James C. Hallock of 203 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, as a footpad who had struck him down in a lonely spot in Prospect Park, last Saturday.

Graham, however, was allowed to go free by Magistrate Cornell, notwithstanding the fact that Detective Sergeant Lang protested that he was a thief with a record, with his picture in the Rogues' Gallery. The man had been arraigned twice Thursday, when Mr. Hopper telephoned that he had gone to Esopus with the other Democratic editors to see Judge Parker. Mr. Hopper did not appear yesterday, either, but Dr. Hallock said he had read of the arrest and had come on the chance that the prisoner might be his assailant.

Leon Levy, Graham's lawyer, vehemently protested that Dr. Hallock's identification was improper because his client was in the custody of a policeman at the time, and argued that his new accuser should have been called upon to pick him out from a line of several others.

SHIP WRECKED, CREW MISSING.

Water-Logged British Schooner Bonny Doone Towed Into Rockland.

ROCKLAND, Me., Sept. 9.—An examination of a dismasted and waterlogged derelict which was towed into Rockland Harbor early in the week, shows that the wreck is that of the British schooner Bonny Doone. The fate of her crew is not known here. There was evidence that the craft had been in a collision.

The Bonny Doone was built at Quaco, N. B., in 1890, and was owned by Chapman, Son & Co., of St. John, her home port. She registered 124 tons. She was bound from Etonville, N. S., for Boston, with lumber.

BOSTON, Sept. 9.—The schooner Bonny Doone carried a crew of five or six men. Lester Dondale of Clementsport, N. C., and his son, Edwin, were on the schooner. Capt. Hayes, the Bonny Doone's skipper, was married a short time before he sailed from Eatonville.

Coroner Scholer Honored.

Coroner Scholer yesterday received a fine album as a token of the esteem of the West Side Taxpayers' Association, the Presidency of which he lately resigned, after ten years of service. The presentation took place at Glenwood Park, L. I., at a banquet, at which over 400 officers and members of the various real estate owners' associations were present. Speeches were made by Coroner Scholer, President Jorgensen of the West Side Taxpayers' Association, Jacob Appell, President Banner of the Real Estate Protective Association of the Twelfth and Nineteenth Wards, and Mr. Demuth.

The new WANAMAKER Special Soft Hats for young men, at $3.50 and $5, in black, pearl, fawn and the new shade of brown, are making a great hit, by reason of their smartness and comfort.

Other excellent lines of Soft Hats and Derbies, in all styles and blocks, at $2 and $3.

Second floor, Ninth street.

New Clothing For Boys

The manufacturers of WANAMAKER'S clothing for boys tell us that we should talk more about the excellence of the clothing they make for us. They say other stores never demand that fabrics shall be all-wool, or that they should be silk-sewed on both sides.

With all this unusual excellence, WANAMAKER'S clothing is exceptionally low-priced. The suits that we sell at $5 cannot be duplicated anywhere at less than $1 to $1.50 more. For instance, these Norfolk Jacket Suits, with bloomers or straight knee-trousers, made of select patterns of mixed and plain blue cheviots, in sizes for 8 to 16 years, at $5 a suit.

Wanamaker Special Double-breasted Jacket Suits, with knee-trousers, of plain blue or mixed cheviots, having double thickness of cloth at seat and knees, in sizes for 8 to 16 years, at $5.

Second floor, Ninth street.

You'll Want These Walking Suits

With the Autumn snap in the air comes the increased activity and zest with which you enter into Fall pursuits. These jaunty Walking Suits help you along—stylish, easy, comfortable, free to move about in. Full of variety, in materials and making, too; and at prices to suit every woman. Among the

are stylish models in tweed, cheviot and broadcloth, with three-quarter length loose coats; with belted backs, or tight-fitting jackets, with vests, or trimmed with braid; or box coats. Skirts are unlined, and stylishly gored and plaited. The group of comprises handsome styles of knob cheviot, herringbone or plain cheviot, camel's hair, covert cloth, broadcloth, plaid or striped materials.

There are five different styles of three-quarter length jackets; tight-fitting coats with vests, or trimmed with braid or velvet; 28-inch jackets and blouses, a number trimmed with cloth. These Tailored Suits have the new shoulders, full sleeves, and cuffs. Skirts are unlined, gored and plaited. Second floor, Broadway.

Women's Sweaters and Golf Vests

These smart over-garments for outing wear on cool days are smarter than ever this Fall. Women are not only wearing them for out-of-door sports, but for shopping and other street wear.

The Sweaters are made in all the favorite colors, including white and black, with plain and fancy stitching of all sorts. Some with bloused fronts and fitted belts. Some in smart new Norfolk style with straps and belt. Some with collars and some collarless. All have full sleeves. Prices range from $2 to $5.

The Golf Vests are priced at $1.75, $2 and $2.75. Second floor, Tenth street.

Autumn Coats For Girls

It's high time for the little girl's Fall Jacket, and chief interest lies in the particular style that's most suitable to wear to school. Here's a group of suggestions, of coats that are as good for wear as they're good to look at; and prices, too, are alluring. Sizes are for 6 to 14 years:

At $5—Full-length Coats of fancy zibeline, in navy blue and brown effects; deep cape trimmed with velvet.

At $7.50—Three-quarter length Regulation Coats of navy blue and brown cheviot; velvet collar; belted back; lined with red flannel.

At $10—Full-length Coats of kersey, in brown, blue and castor shades; deep cape, trimmed with braid.

New Fall SHOES

The smart new Autumn styles in shoes for men and women are coming forward rapidly. Probably the most interesting to women will be the WANAMAKER Reliable Shoes at $3—of which these four models are likely to be popular: The dull kid lace boots with heavy soles; made with lace hooks for quick fastening. The box calfskin Blucher lace shoes with neat Cuban heels. The patent leather Blucher lace shoes with dull kid tops. The box calfskin plain lace shoes with dull kid tops and heavy extension soles.

These shoes are made in the most stylish manner, made of the best leather and handsomely finished—$3 a pair.

Three new models in men's double-soled shoes at $5 deserve your attention. The Blucher lace shoe, enamel leather with dull kid tops. The all box calf lace shoes, and the enamel leather lace shoes with dull tops, are very smart in appearance. All $5 a pair.

Those who wish everyday shoes at lower prices will be interested in the new arrival of men's $1.90 shoes which will be hard to match with any shoe outside of WANAMAKER'S, sold for less than $3. In box calfskin, kidskin and patent leather with oak leather Goodyear welted soles, all sizes in E width only.

Women's shoes at $1.90 of kidskin in seven different styles, laced and buttoned, with patent leather or kid tips, Cuban or military heels in all sizes and widths, exceptionally good for school wear.

Girls' spring-heel Shoes at $1.60, in sizes 11 to 2. Welted soles of oak leather, and uppers of durable black kidskin, either laced or buttoned. Smaller sizes of the same shoes at $1.30. Fourth avenue.

The Furniture Store has taken on a new appearance in the past few days, by reason of the inrush of new pieces for the Fall and Winter business. Examples will be found of all the leading styles of fine furniture of the finest quality of finish. Colonial pieces will be largely used this Fall, and whilst reproductions, they are so true to the original designs that they might almost be thought to be originals. The French "period" furniture is fully represented, as well as German and Italian Renaissance, and the finest English designs. Fine furniture was never so well finished and constructed as today and never sold for smaller prices.

A Center Table in solid mahogany; round top with a rope moulding edge and deep rim; a heavy pedestal with four legs, all finely carved; a Colonial reproduction, richly finished. Price, $32.

Louis XV. Dresser; solid mahogany, drawer-fronts have crotch veneer on mahogany, mouldings and carvings richly fashioned and finished, French pattern plate mirror, large size and of exquisite finish. Price, $180. Dressing Table to match, priced at $115.

Parlor Suite of three pieces; an English design after Sheraton; mahogany frames, neatly moulded and finished, turned and fluted legs, panel back, broad band of inlay and inlaid lines, cover in damask and gold tinsel, willow green color, seats have box edges and fine upholstery. Price, $75.

Colonial Library Table, mahogany; top has heavy rope moulding around the edge; corners below the top are carved; shaped legs with richly carved knees and claw feet; five drawers; glass drawer-pulls; a rich dark red mahogany, highly polished. Price, $63.

An English Colonial Center Table of exquisite design; rich dark mahogany, polished. Price, $80.

A mahogany Bookcase in a fine, plain old Colonial design has three doors with three sections for books; rich dark red mahogany, dull finish. Price, $70.

A man's Wardrobe, Louis XV. design; richly moulded and carved, of exquisite finish throughout; three drawers with four trays and one shelf behind the upper doors. Price, $175.

A Library Suite in Dutch marquetry; all mahogany of fine figure; the marquetry work is in an exquisite pattern, and the pieces are completely covered with the inlay. The suite contains sofa, arm chair, reception chair, desk chair, a winged arm chair, a bookcase, a large table, a writing desk. Price, $821. Fourth floor.

The New CARPETS Are Ready

All fresh, beautiful and in almost endless variety. These are the days to get the cream of the new stock, and it is a wise time to make selections so that your carpets may be made and all ready to be delivered and laid when you are ready for them. The selection is much more satisfying if done before the hurry-time begins.

$15 Overcoats For Wise Men

We have struck a finely adjusted balance between high quality and low price in these Fifteen-dollar Fall Overcoats for Men.

We have put in the excellent tailoring, the worthy materials, the fine points of style that are required to make an overcoat satisfactory, smart and serviceable, while maintaining the price at a figure that will appeal to seven men out of every ten—

Fifteen Dollars

—a price, by the way, that is several dollars below what these same overcoats would command if sold at other stores' ordinary rate of profit.

The material is Oxford Vicuna, lined throughout and faced to edge with pure silk Merveilleux, or silk-lined and cloth-faced.

Similar Overcoats, in higher grades, at $20, $22 and $25.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Mourning VEILS And a Bargain

Made of plain or fancy hair-line and Tuxedo meshes, with border of one, two or three rows of silk ribbon. Square in shape, 1½ yards long, for hats; round, 1 yard long, for bonnets.

Unusually good values at their prices—in fact, they're worth a quarter to a third more:

Round Veils, 50c: worth 75c
Square Veils, $1: worth $1.25

About two-thirds of the quantity in the square shape, at the higher price. Broadway

Men's Scarfs 50¢ Worth a Lot More Than Their Price

Styles that are right for Autumn wear; at a price that is just about half the real value of the scarfs—50c each.

French Four-in-hands, 2, 2¼ and 2¾ in. wide, are 50c and $1.

Folded Squares, 2½ in. wide, are $1 and $1.50. Patterns and colorings are varied and in good taste.

Men's Furnishings, Broadway and Ninth street.

A Surprise in Separate Skirts

The surprise is a very welcome one. It consists of paying less, by a third or so, for Separate Dress and Walking Skirts, in the latest and most approved Autumn styles, than the skirts are actually worth.

We drove a hard bargain with the manufacturer, just before the Fall rush set in; and now you're reaping the benefit of our forethought. These fine groups:

At $6—Walking Skirts of tweed, sharkskin or broadcloth; gored and plaited in four different styles.

At $7.50—Walking Skirts of canvas weave cheviot; gored and plaited, with straps to form yoke.

At $10—Walking Skirts of cheviot; 7-gore, each gore with box plaits; finished with buttons.

At $11—Dress Skirts of canvas, with stitched side plaits to knees; with flare. Second floor, Broadway.

MILITIA WERE TIRED; CORBIN CALLED IT OFF

"Third Battle of Bull Run" a Drawn One, Abruptly Ended.

UMPIRES TO AWARD VICTORY

Bell's Attacking Army Displayed Usual Brilliant Tactics, but Result Is Unknown.

Special to The New York Times.

PRESS CAMP, GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 9.—After four days of real marching, mowed down by imaginary bullets and torn to pieces by theoretical shrapnel, the Blue and Brown armies are resting in their tents to-night, wondering which won the battle which ended the tactical part of the Manassas manoeuvres this afternoon. The second problem was fought out nobly this morning with Bull Run as the dividing line between the two battle fronts.

The trenches used in the old battles are well preserved and were used to-day. Gen. Bell, with his Brown army, made a brilliant attack on Gen. Grant, who skillfully defended Washington with a Blue army, but whether Gen. Bell is eating a theoretical dinner in Washington or is weeping imaginary tears back at his Thoroughfare base is a question which will have to be decided each one for himself.

The advantage of to-day undoubtedly is with Gen. Bell, the Brown Commander, just as the working out of the first problem seemed to favor the Blue Commander. The second brigade of the Browns, under Gen. Barry, made a wide flanking movement, surprising and crushing the Blue left under Gen. Bliss, and inflicting theoretical losses.

This was offset in part by the fact that Col. Smith's Blue brigade, holding the right centre, was fresh, and in a position to strongly reinforce Gen. Bliss. New York's Twelfth in Barry's Brown brigade, and the Eighth Massachusetts, after a long forced march from midnight, attacked in the morning and practically destroyed the Blue Alabama regiment on the east side of Bull Run.

Then the New Yorkers and the Bay State men forded the Run in triumph. Gen. Wint with the Blue rear guard won more laurels to-day, and Col. Arthur Wagner, the well-known writer on tactics, said to-night that Gen. Wint's work was of a high order of excellence, and was the best point scored by the Blue army. Its heaviest losses were sustained by the First South Carolina, the First Alabama, and the First Florida. Brooklyn's Fourteenth suffered heavily, and part of it was captured.

According to the officers engaged, the foreign Military Attachés and other military experts who watched the manoeuvres, the elaborate tactical warfare has been eminently successful in its main purpose. The end of the Spanish war was the beginning of the great improvements which have marked the development of our fighting system, one of the problems of which has been the welding of the State and regular troops into an easily dirigible unit.

The idea took definite form when the first moves were made toward the creation of a General Staff, and in the Summer of 1902 militia and regulars were amalgamated to resist the attacks of a naval force. The posts were manned by their regular garrisons assisted by militia, and as a result it was conceded as not at all probable that an enemy could effect a successful entrance to New York Harbor.

Following the same plan, the army manoeuvres took place at Fort Riley, Kan., last year. There were three manoeuvre camps of amalgamated militia and regulars at Fort Riley, at West Point, Ky., and at Portland, Me., where the troops were called upon to defend that city against an attack from the Atlantic Squadron of the navy.

The number of men in all three camps, however, was much less than those who have been engaged in the present Manassas manoeuvres, in which the 27,000 troops were about one part regular to four parts militia, and for purposes of instruction there was one battalion of regulars and four regiments of militia in each of the eight brigades, there being four brigades to each opposing division.

The chief interest, therefore, has centred upon the work of the militia. It was soon observed that in point of endurance the State troops could not hold up to the regulars, and this afternoon, after four days of scouting, marching, raiding, and skirmishing, no comparisons were possible. To the regular troops, naturally, has been given the bulk of the work when quick and decisive movements were called for, and, although cavalry and infantry have been incessantly at it, they were fresh and strong this afternoon.

The militiamen generally were completely fagged, and look forward with dread to the grand review at Wellington to-morrow, when they will be expected to look as well as the regulars. One of the most worn-out bodies on the whole field is New York's Twelfth because of the fact that in the working out of the problem which was solved to-day they were obliged to march thirty miles or more.

Yesterday they came from Buckland, at the extreme southwest corner of the manoeuvre field, to Pagel and Lane, near Bull Run. Last night they withdrew from that position and bivouacked on Little Bull Run, when they started out at midnight for Catharpin at the centre of the northern edge of the battle ground, whence they marched down all the way to Stone Bridge, which crosses Bull Run, arriving at the centre of activity about 8 o'clock this morning.

They went back nine miles to their Thoroughfare camp this afternoon, and to-morrow they will march almost that distance back to Wellington for the review. The other militia troops are in almost as sorry a condition, with the exception, perhaps, of the Second New York from upState, the Second Georgia, the Second Texas, and a regiment from Maine composed chiefly of guides, all the troops named having distinguished themselves during the war game, by good marching, which apparently has not tired them out.

Nevertheless, military observers express themselves as greatly surprised that the militiamen did so well, and none are higher in their praise than the regular officers.

Sir Howard Vincent, who has taken a great interest in the developments of the British Volunteer Corps and who is an enthusiastic admirer of our National Guard, has been a guest of Gen. Corbin, and he, too eulogized the work of our militiamen in the field.

The militia officers are unanimous in saying that they have learned more in the last week about the practical side of military science than they could get in a lifeling State encampment. Some of the officers have had regulars under their command; for instance, Major B. Ridgman of New York's crack troopers. Squadron A, who had under him a company of the Fifteenth regular cavalry.

Gen. Frost of the Connecticut National Guard was commander of Gen. Grant's Fourth Brigade in the Blue army, and his command included four troops of the Fifth Regular Cavalry.

On account of the condition of the troops, Gen. Corbin announced that the problem had been solved shortly after the opposing lines had established contact about 8:30 this morning. The Blue army was near its base at Manassas, but the Browns were far away from their Thoroughfare camp.

Anticipating this, Gen. Corbin ordered all available army wagons and ambulances to go to Stone Bridge, and there were nearly 300 of them on hand to convey back to camp those soldiers who were too far gone to march the distance. In addition most of the cars on hand were requisitioned, and great numbers were transported back to camp in that way.

An incident of the fight at the Stone Bridge was the capture of the Connecticut Battery of two machine guns by the First Alabama Blues, defending the position. The battery advanced unprotected and unsupported, and was technically put out of action by the Alabama rifles.

The Alabamas here, however lost the greatest opportunity of the day, because with the captured machine guns, which were already loaded, they might have turned them against the enemy. In this way the Ninth infantry and the Seventh Cavalry, the very flower of the Brown Army, would have been annihilated by technical bullets.

The officers, both regular and militia, derived a greater benefit from the manoeuvres, perhaps, than did the enlisted men.

Company and battalion commanders have frequent opportunity to exercise their commands, and more infrequently regimental commanders figure in peace time drills, but brigade, division, and corps commanders have to wait until actual war to put their theories into practice.

To allow such officers an experience in handling large bodies of troops the only way, except actual war, is in manoeuvres of the sort just concluded, in which great numbers of troops have been engaged. This has been one of the chief purposes of the present war game, practically the first real army manoeuvres ever held in this country.

The grand review, the spectacular feature of the manoeuvres programme, will be held to-morrow, and all the 27,000 troops will pass in review before Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of the General Staff. A distinguished array of guests will arrive with him to-morrow from Washington. Gov. John L. Bates of Massachusetts arrived this afternoon.

WHEELER ON THE FIELD.

Confederate Officer Greets Bell—"Sue" Monroe Routs "Yankee."

Special to The New York Times.

GAINESVILLE, Va., Sept. 9.—The final conflict of the war game, while brief because the problem was declared solved as soon as the lines were in their final positions, was dramatic, because it was over the part of Bull Run field in which occurred the fiercest fighting in the two battles. The day's fighting centred at historic Stone Bridge, where Warrenton Turnpike crosses Bull Run, and is the position which McDowell uncovered when he turned the Confederate flank in the first Bull Run.

At that famous old bridge to-day there was a fight as sharp and as stirring as mimic warfare can evolve, and defending Blues and attacking Browns were in almost hand-to-hand conflict on opposite sides of Bull Run and near Stone Bridge, which theoretically had been destroyed by Blue engineers defending the position.

On the brow of the hill just east of Bull Run a party of military observers, including the greater portion of the foreign attachés, watched the battle. Conspicuous among the brilliant uniforms of the foreigners was Gen. "Joe" Wheeler, his person set off in all the military pomp and glory of an old blue coat and straw hat.

"This looks pretty much like the real thing," said the General, watching the Browns advance again, the Blue artillery behind. "It isn't quite the same with smokeless powder, though, but that isn't likely to give away a position like the old sort."

A company of Browns forded the creek just about that time, walking through it, and Gen. Wheeler remarked that he thought the militia should take greater care in operations of that sort.

"They ought to be taught better," he said. "Now those men have their feet wet all day. If a few troops assigned to that purpose went ahead and chopped down some trees, the work of a few minutes, a whole regiment could cross dry shod."

While he was in neither battle of Bull Run, Gen. Wheeler has a great interest in the field, as in Congress he was one of the principal supporters of Gen. Fitz John Porter. Before he made his speech in the House on the relief bill for Gen. Porter, which went through, Gen. Wheeler visited the battlefield and studied it carefully.

One of the group of attachés who surrounded Gen. Wheeler on the plateau was Col. Monte Verde, representing Spain. While cantering up the hill for a few moments before, his horse threw him, and the Spaniard's knee was painfully though not seriously hurt. While he was describing an aerial arc the flying attaché's trousers and white curtained hemlet badly scared a number of native horses on the hill.

Gen. Bell of the Brown Army had his headquarters at Stone House, which is on the Warrenton Pike, a short distance west of Stone Bridge, and which served as a hospital for the wounded during both battles of Bull Run. While he was there Col. T. B. Massey, a distinguished-looking old man, and wearing his Confederate uniform with the three stars on the collar, denoting his rank, rode up and paid his respects to the Brown commander.

Col. Massey commanded the Twelfth Virginia in Ashby's old brigade. Gen Bell received him cordially, and presented him to his staff, after which Col. Massey was photographed with Gen. Bell and Gen. Humphrey, Quartermaster General of the army, standing on either side of him.

Another incident of the day occurred when a Blue reserve was in position near "Sue" Monroe's house, south of the Henry house. She is distantly related to the Presidential family, lives alone in the house, and is the principal character in the county. A Blue soldier went into her orchard.

"Sue" is vigorous, though sixty-two, and she advanced to meet him. "Get out of my orchard, you Yankee soldier," she said. "I've got the password," said the Blue, smiling and reaching for an apple.

"Well, I've got a password, too," said "Sue," and she drew a bead on him with a big, old-fashioned revolver. The Blue hastily deployed to cover.

SQUADRON NOT TO RETURN.

Second Cavalry to Stay in Virginia After Manoeuvres.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The squadron of the Second Cavalry, which made the long march from Fort Ethan Allen to Thoroughfare Gap, will not be obliged to make the return march. An order was issued to-day at the War Department sending the men to Fort Myer, where they will go into camp for a few weeks or until the battalion of the Fifteenth Cavalry vacates quarters and goes to Fort Ethan Allen. The Second, with the mounted band of the regiment, will leave here Oct. 20.

T. E. Roessle's Estate $1,350,000.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The will of T. E. Roessle, owner of the Arlington Hotel, was filed to-day, disposing of $1,350,000 worth of property. In the petition accompanying the will it is stated that Mr. Roessle left $1,000,000 of property in New York and about $150,000 in real estate and $200,000 in personal property in Washington. Full control of the Arlington is left to the widow, and the estate is bequeathed to her, to Mr. Roessle's son, Elwood Roessle, and to Marion Louise McKinney, a daughter of Mr. Roessle's first wife.

Verdict for $1,500 Against Mendham.

WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 9.—A jury in the County Court to-day gave a verdict for $1,500 damages against Maurice Mendham, the New York broker, in favor of Spencer Jones, sixteen years old, of Ossining, who was run down by Mendham's automobile in Ossining and badly injured. Suit was brought for $2,000 damages.

Appeal for Needy Family.

The Charity Organization Society has renewed its appeal for $50 for the support of a family. The husband will be in a hospital for some time. The wife is delicate and unable to support their two young children. Money sent to the society at 105 East Twenty-second Street will be acknowledged.

75 Deported Gypsies to Sail To-day.

Seventy-five of the 200 gypsies at Ellis Island who are to be deported will sail this morning on the Campania. The rest will be sent back when the children who are ill of the measles recover. Officers at Ellis Island said yesterday that in the future gypsies would have a hard time landing here.

Excursion Boats Stop Sunday Trips.

Two of the Sunday excursion steamboats will discontinue their trips for the rest of the season after to-morrow. The boats are the City of Lowell, which runs up the Hudson, and the Richard Peck, which runs to New Haven.

TRESTLE TAMPERED WITH, TRAIN CRASHES THROUGH

4 PERSONS KILLED, 33 INJURED

Spikes and Bolts Had Been Removed from High Bridge Over a Meadow in North Carolina.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 9.—While a Seaboard Air Line passenger train was running about forty miles an hour over a trestle about 300 feet long, spanning a meadow near the Catawba River, at 1 o'clock this morning, the trestle gave way. The engine and some of the cars passed over, but were drawn backward into the abyss and upon the rear cars, and then, to add to the disaster, a light engine and caboose following ran on top of the train.

Four persons were killed and thirty-three injured. The killed are: Engineer E. Y. Barksdale of the light engine, Abbeville, S. C.; Fireman Ed Roberts (colored) of the passenger engine, Atlanta, Ga.; a Mrs. Black, and an unidentified woman.

George S. Fitzwater, chief detective of the Seaboard Air Line, said this afternoon that he had found some spikes and bolts and two angle bars which had been removed from the track with claw bars. He was confident that criminal work had been done. He expressed his belief that some one had disconnected the joints in the lower half of the bridge.

The stretch of track in that vicinity is a clear, straight, and apparently well-built one. The timbers of the bridge appear to have been wrenched from their fastenings, and those that are splintered are of sound wood. There was nothing to suggest that the foundations of the structure were undermined by a washout, although the ground was somewhat marshy yesterday.

Gaston Mears, the engineer of the passenger train, escaped with some bruises and a painful scalp wound. He said that just before the engine had swept entirely clear of the structure he felt it sinking, but the impetus carried the engine and all the cars except the first-class passenger car and the Pullman over and clear of the yawning gulf, which was left when half the bridge collapsed, but the engine and cars were swerved from their course to the right, tearing the rail loose from its fastenings and hurling the entire train upside down over an embankment to the meadow, about thirty feet below.

When the train went crashing over the embankment every light went out, and passengers were thrown against the sides of the coaches, bleeding and bruised.

Mrs. Black, sitting with her husband, who is a telegraph operator in the service of the Norfolk and Western, gave a short cry, and when he managed to strike a match and find her body he discovered that she was dead, her neck having been broken. She was the only passenger killed or even hurt seriously.

As the scrambling and shouting went on in the dark, above the noises a brakeman, with his head half way out of a window, was heard to shout: "My God, the freight train is coming upon us."

In less than a minute the engine and caboose, which had left Monroe fifteen minutes behind the passenger train, struck the open space where the bridge had fallen and plunged its way through the passenger cars. The woman whose identity could not be discovered then met her death.

Mr. Black was the last man to leave the coaches, and the very first thing he did was to walk in his bruised condition to Catawba Junction, two miles away, and send a telegram for help to Monroe, twenty-two miles distant. Aid was promptly sent and the injured were taken to Monroe.

SPEEDING ENGINE TURNS OVER.

Two Men Killed and One Seriously Injured in Alabama.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 9.—Two men were killed and another man was seriously injured in a wreck on the Southern Railway between Dogwood and Wilton, on the Birmingham and Selma Division this afternoon. The dead are W. H. Cherry, engineer, and Will Ivey, a negro brakeman. The injured man is N. L. Snow, fireman.

The train was running thirty miles an hour when the engine jumped the track, struck the cross ties, and turned completely over.

LYNCHING MOB FOILED.

Georgia Judge and Sheriff Get Negro Murderer to Safety.

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., Sept. 9.—Sheriff Fordham to-day received a telegram from Judge Spence, at Camilla, ordering him to call out the militia to protect Whitney Williford, a negro under arrest on the charge of murder, as a mob from Mitchell County was on the way to Bainbridge to lynch him.

Orders were given for the militia to hold itself in readiness to respond to a hurry call. Meanwhile the prisoner was put on a train and hurried to Tallahassee, Fla., whence he will be returned to some unknown point in Georgia to-night. Thus the mob has been foiled.

NEGRO TRAIN WRECKERS.

Three Blacks Captured for Attack on Southern Railway Train.

ROANOKE, Va., Sept. 9.—Detectives to-day captured Joe Fuquin, "Major" Guthrie, and Roland Gerst, three negroes wanted for attempting to wreck a passenger train on the Southern Railway at a point near South Boston, Va., some time ago.

The men were arrested near the scene of the attempted wreck, and a telegram received here this evening from a detective is to the effect that Guthrie and Gerst have confessed.

The men were placed in jail at South Boston after a preliminary hearing at which they were sent on to the Grand Jury.

ROBBERY PROMPTED MURDER.

No Evidence of a "Before Day Club" in Florida Case.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Sept. 9.—The Coroner's jury, which met to-day to inquire into the killing of County School Superintendent Epps, found that Mr. Epps came to his death from a gunshot wound, the shot having been fired by Isham Edwards. Edwards was held for murder, and Caldwell and Larkins were held as accessories before the fact.

No evidence was introduced to show the existence of "Before Day Clubs," though one witness testified to going to church after midnight. Excitement is subsiding. It is believed that the murder was committed for robbery and the existence of "Before Day Clubs" here is beginning to be doubted.

ELKINS TRACTION STOCK SOLD TO A SYNDICATE

35,000 Shares of Philadelphia Rapid Transit Secured.

STEP IN BIG HARMONY PLAN

Advances Scheme for Practical Merger of New York, New Jersey, and Philadelphia Trolley Lines.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9.—A deal by which about 35,000 shares of stock of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company belonging to the estate of William L. Elkins was sold to a syndicate of inside Philadelphia and New York traction interests was completed to-day by George A. Huhn & Son and Wolf Brothers & Co. of this city, and three New York banking houses.

The sale marks the end of the Widener-Elkins traction syndicate organized thirty years ago. The transfer is one of the steps in the harmony plan that will eventually develop into a community of interest scheme to be participated in by the lines of Greater New York, Philadelphia, and the roads in New Jersey controlled by the Public Service Corporation.

Previously about 15,000 shares of the Elkins rapid transit stock were sold to members of the same syndicate, which to-day purchased the remaining 35,000. In the deal George W. Elkins, one of the executors, acted for the estate. The price paid was about $15 a share. The stock has gone to men who were close friends and associates of Mr. Elkins. Among these are John B. Parsons, President of the Rapid Transit; P. A. B. Widener, George D. Widener, J. J. Sullivan, William H. Shelmerdine, Michael Murphy, John M. Mack, George A. Huhn, and Clarence Wolf of Philadelphia and Thomas F. Ryan, August Belmont, James H. Hyde, and John D. Crimmins of New York.

In anticipation of the sale of the Elkins estate holdings Rapid Transit stock has been active and strong on the Philadelphia market for several days. The announcement of the sale to-day caused a boom, and a new high record price was reached. Nearly 12,000 shares of the stock were traded in, and a sale was made at the record price, 17⅝, which is $2.37½ above the amount paid in. The stock closed at 16⅞ to 17.

The capital of the company is $35,000,000, divided into 600,000 shares of a par value of $50. When the company was organized $5 a share was paid in. This assessment amounted to $3,000,000. In May, 1903, a second call for $5 was made, and the third $5 was paid last December, making in all $9,000,000 called. A fourth assessment will be called next month. It will be for $5 a share. This will bring the total paid-in capital up to $12,000,000.

Much of the money being called on the stock is going into the construction of the Market Street subway and elevated line and other improvements.

ROUMANIA'S SHORT MAIZE CROP

Prohibition Against Importation to be Maintained.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—United States Minister Jackson writes from Sinaia, Roumania, as follows:

"It is at present anticipated that the crops in Roumania and Hungary will be poor, and that the maize crop in particular will be almost a total failure. In consequence the price of maize has gone up, and it was feared that this increase might be followed by the sale of the whole crop, as well as all that remains from last year, and that much suffering among the peasants would result. This led to the prohibition of the exportation of maize.

"In conversing this morning with Mr. Bratiano, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, I learned that it is the present intention of the existing Government to maintain this prohibition, at least until after the harvest is over and the exact situation becomes clear, and until suitable provision is made for the retention in Roumania of a sufficient quantity of maize to prevent a famine.

"Mr. Bratiano said that this time the Government is on its guard and that there will be no repetition of the events of 1899. In commercial circles, however, considerable opposition to this prohibition has already been shown, and as the opponents of the Government have given evidence of an intention to make the question one of politics, it is impossible to foretell the duration of the prohibition.

"In any event it is probable that a market for maize will be opened in Northern Italy. Large quantities of that grain are shipped from Kustendji and the Danubian ports to Trieste and Venice every year, and the Italian Minister here has already notified his Government that this year the usual supply must be obtained from other sources."

HUNGARIANS SEE PRESIDENT.

Count Apponyi and Ambassador Entertained at Luncheon.

OYSTER BAY, Sept. 9.—Baron Ladislaus Hengelmuller, Ambassador of Austria-Hungary to America, and Count Apponyi, leader of the Liberals in the lower house of the Hungarian Diet, were guests of President and Mrs. Roosevelt to-day. Count Apponyi, who intends to visit the St. Louis Exposition and to make a short tour of the country, desired to pay his respects to President Roosevelt, and his presentation to him to-day was arranged through the Austrian Embassy.

The visit, it is asserted, was of no official significance. The Hungarian visitors were entertained at luncheon by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

TIPPING BRITISH SERVANTS.

English Hosts Object to Americans Giving Attendants "Dotations."

LONDON, Sept. 1.—A decidedly nasty and boorish Englishman who wrote a letter to The Times about "American Visitors" received a most beautiful dressing-down in a communication which The Times published this morning. Without doubt the two letters in question will be read with great interest on the other side of the Atlantic. They are as follows:

THE BRITISHER'S ATTACK.

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir: Now that the time is drawing near when our friends from the other side of the Atlantic begin to prepare to return to their homes, I venture to make a friendly appeal to them through your columns on the subject of tipping servants. The master of the house seldom knows what his guests do in this respect, but it leaks out sometimes, and when the amount given exceeds just the friendly recognition of personal service it cannot but hurt the feelings of the host. Last year an extravagant dotation sent into the servants' hall came to the knowledge of a lady neighbor of mine, who said indignantly of her departed guest, "Does he think I cannot afford to pay my own servants' wages?" Our American cousins are largely endowed with an honorable pride, and I venture to quote for their benefit, even at the risk of giving offense to those who are the most delightful guests in England and the most charming of hosts in their own country, a passage from Sir Walter Scott. It occurs in "The Bride of Lammermoor":

"Sir William, therefore, only smiled and replied he had something else to think upon to-day than killing deer; meantime, taking out his purse, he gave to the ranger a dollar for his encouragement. The fellow received it as the waiter at a fashionable hotel receives a double his proper fee from the hands of a country gentleman—that is, with a smile, in which pleasure at the gift is mingled with contempt for the ignorance of the donor."

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
COUNTRY HOUSE.

August 10.

WHAT HE MADE OUT OF IT.

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir: Like most Americans in England I fancied that not only The Times, but also all those who write letters to The Times, heartily desired to promote good feeling between the better classes of the two countries. But the letter from "Country House" in your issue of to-day runs more than a mere "risk of giving offense" when it suggests to us that we excite hosts' indignation and servants' contempt by tipping too generously. "Dotations"—which, in my American ignorance, (shared by the editors of the New English Dictionary,) I thought meant "endowments," not "tips," until this letter enlightened me—are supposed to be governed by the customs of the donor's own country. Americans tip more largely than Englishmen, and they, in turn, more largely than Frenchmen. When I am in America, and am the "delightful host" of Englishmen, I do not know what my guests give my servants, for if a guest offered my butler a tip under his host's nose (as I have more than once seen an Englishman do in an English house) I think my butler would be tactful enough to wriggle into such a position that I need not see him take it. And we have not yet in America organized the system of domestic intelligence by which the tittle-tattle of the servants' hall percolates upward, in defiance of gravitation and decorum. I have, however, been a fellow-guest of Englishmen in American houses, and I have seen some of them give a servant a fifth of the sum an American would give, notwithstanding the circumstance that they (again, naturally enough, following the custom of their country) expect their luggage to be unpacked upon their arrival and packed for their departure, an exaction which leads to inconvenience, just before the time of dinner and at the time of breakfast, in some American houses, which are not, to quote Mr. Bernard Shaw's phrase, "infested by voracious parasites" to such an extent as English houses. Servants in America are no longer amazed at the discretion with which English visitors measure their vails, and, save upon an occasion for self-defense such as you now present, no American host would permit himself to observe that the principle of prudent campaigning which makes many Englishmen who live in state at home frequent second-class hotels on the Continent also restricts the ardor of their generosity when they visit American houses. Here, again, each country has its own usages. Most Americans travel abroad when they have worked so hard and so successfully that they have money to waste. Some Englishmen subject themselves to a foreign sojourn when they are impelled to diminish the expenditure which gives splendor to their life in England. Even if it be conceded that an American sinned in the instance cited, is he not rather to be pitied than blamed? He discovered, when he first visited England, that London tradesmen refrain from marking their goods in plain figures, and invariably charge the American a higher price than the Englishmen. He discovered in due course that he was expected to exercise lavish hospitality toward the younger sons and elder daughters of men whose guest-books, when greed or accident brings them into the hands of the profane, are found to be unsullied by American names. If he buys a horse he pays a little more than an Englishman would pay, and if the horse wins a few races the seat of the American jockey is described as unsportsmanlike by the employers of those English jockeys who promptly adopt it. Is it surprising that the American who finds in force, throughout England, this principle of a protective tariff for revenue only, should imagine that his English host's servants, like every one else in England, expect him to part with his money more freely than does an Englishman? I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A PLEA FOR JUDGES FIT AND WELL TRAINED

Appeal for the Public, the Suitor, and the Lawyer.

ENGLISH PRACTICE PRAISED

The Power for Harm of the Judge Who Is Deaf—The Value of an Active Practice.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The public which pays, the suitors that suffer, even the lawyers who profit, are hardly mentioned in the forecasts as to the persons who are soon to sit in the Court of Appeals. Compared with either of these classes, no one else has any rights which anybody is bound to respect, neither the politicians nor their parties, nor the hopers for preferment or promotion, be they Democratic or Republican.

Two, and only two, ways of filling the bench of last resort are professed by European peoples—the Continental system of raising practitioners in the judicial career step by step until experts of the highest type are transferred to the highest court, and the English method in which Judges "are chosen for the High Court of Justice from the most eminent members of the English bar." We have affected the English way, but not acquired the English manner, superiority for which is claimed in the accompaniment to the report of the Commission on the Law's Delays.

On the Continent runs the Roman rule that a Judge must be in possession of his five physical faculties. This is generally respected in England.

We have had learned, also prolix, Judges too deaf to hear arguments of counsel or readily the remarks of colleagues, and whose infirmity, occasionally the source of amusement, has been the perennial spring of irritation and disappointment.

Performance of judicial functions by a person who does not hear is practicable only under written procedure, toward which, with the facile verbosity of the stenographer and the typist, appellate practice tends somewhat in this State, but from which the recent codes have emancipated court practice in Austria and Germany, codes framed not by lawyers, but by bureaucratic administrations. It is out of character for a deaf man to sit in any court ordained to hear argument ore tenus. It is foreign doctrine, but good withal, that "a Judge is disqualified who has not heard and considered the whole cause and documents before the court." So it is reported that in Innes vs. Duke of Gordon, where the case had been heard before the court, and was submitted with written memorials and additional documents, the vote of a Judge who had considered these latter, but was not present at the hearing, was rejected. The fact that Allen, J., wrote the opinion in a notable case, though he did not hear the argument, was thought by Mr. O'Connor so unseemly that he refused for years every retainer to appear before the Court of Appeals. Mr. Tilden never again entered its chamber as a lawyer.

It is indispensable that the Chief Judge hear readily. The circumstance that he "sits in the middle" gives prestige neither to his concurrence nor to his dissent. He has no casting vote. He is, however, the organ of the appellate bench to the appellate bar, particularly in the application of the rules, helpful or onerous to the dispensation of justice in the dispatch of business, according to their enforcement, rationally or otherwise, in the exigencies presented—presented for the most part orally and orally to be met.

Having recourse to the analogy of adversity, it may be recalled that anciently the praetor, because of misfortune, forbade the deaf to appear as advocate, because it was not permissible to allow one to try a cause who could not hear the praetor's ruling, and for whom, indeed, it might be perilous, since if he did not hear what the praetor said he might be punished as one in contempt for disobeying an order.

Whether or not the Judge be he that "sits in the middle," he is the better qualified by the knowledge acquired before going to the bench by actual experience in the disposition of many and varied questions presented with immediate interest because of immediate concern to his clients. The fact and force of this will be impressive to any layman or lawyer who will look over the roster of the Court of Appeals and peruse the decisive opinions upon legal principles and laws applied to facts which have been brought vividly to his own attention. To make mention of a few, calamo currente and not invidiously: Hiram Denio may have descanted curiously about the humble duty of the court and its unwillingness to usurp power when writing to uphold a novel disposition of the metropolitan constabulary half a century ago, but his opinions, still luminous respecting commercial paper, bills of lading, and other concerns of the law merchant, show the fruits of his experience as Director and President of a bank in his home city, whose enterprises called for lawyers trained in such matters. George Comstock, almost his neighbor, was learned in cases by actual application before he took up editing commentaries or came to be a Judge. Charles Rapallo, with all his signal mental powers, would not have been so cogent and clear in his exposition of the law governing the causes presented him on appeal had he not theretofore been wonted to advise upon and declare the law, day by day, upon questions more intricate and involving larger amounts of money than are usually presented to the Court of Appeals. It has been remarked that to no member of like brief tenure in our highest court ever fell in the routine of business so many cases of moment as to Benjamin Tracy. Is it not more likely that what he had learned and thought out in his notable practice as advocate and counsel enabled him to stamp causes before the whole court, whether his by routine or no, into leading cases? Perhaps less conspicuous for lore than these worthies were Sanford Church and William Ruger, who, besides undoubted abilities and no mean knowledge of the law and decided cases, brought to their high position from active practice before the bar, mayhap even from participation in political life, worldly wisdom and intimate acquaintance with human affairs and the needs of business, which contributed excellently to the administration of the court over which they presided.

The semi-official reference, noted above, to the English way of choosing Judges for the High Court of Justice from the most eminent members of the English bar seems not untimely. Consequent upon, or coincident with, such a practice has grown up a judiciary enjoying the respect and confidence the wide world over, has grown up also a jurisprudence of which wrote the most critical and most practical of all law reformers: "Inadequate, ill-adapted, and inconsistent as to a vast extent the provision or no provision would be found to be that has been made by it for the various cases that have happened to present themselves for decision, yet in the character of a repository of such cases it affords, for the manufactory of real law, a stock of materials which is beyond all price. Traverse the whole continent of Europe, ransack all the libraries belonging to all the jurisprudential systems of the several political States, add the contents together, you would not be able to compose a collection of cases equal in variety, in amplitude, in clearness of statement—in a word, all points taken together in constructiveness—to that which may seem to be afforded by the collection of English reports of adjudged cases." (Jeremy Bentham's Letter to the President of the United States of America, October, 1811.)

HORSE INTOXICATED, WON RACE

Found Strength in Quart of Champagne To Foil Plot of Competitors.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 9.—At the County Fair, which is being held in Carmel, Putnam County, N. Y., one of the horse races was won yesterday in an unusual manner. This trot was open only to horses owned in the county, and the purse was small, but it was the most exciting race of the day, as there was much rivalry among the three towns interested, Carmel, Brewster, and Patterson.

A big bay gelding named Monte and owned by E. A. Ives of Patterson, was one of the four horses entered. One of the others was from Carmel, and the two others were from Brewster. The Patterson horse won the first two heats amid great excitement, as hundreds of dollars had been bet on the race.

At that stage of the game a plot was hatched by the owners of the other horses to win the race by tiring the Patterson horse in scoring before the next heat. This worked to perfection, as the big bay was so exhausted after the start was finally made that it was barely able to get around the track.

There was one more heat, and nobody thought this horse would be able to make an appearance. Contrary to all expectations, however, the Patterson horse not only appeared, but showed an amount of metal it had never been known to display before. It won the heat and the race 100 yards ahead of the rest.

It was discovered afterward that before the last heat a quart of champagne had been procured at the hotel, and all of it was poured down the horse's throat. The animal behaved in a most boisterous and unseemly manner at the stable after it had won the race, and followed this an hour later by going to sleep.

FORCED STICK DOWN THROAT.

Judge Krueger's Little Grandson Dies After Odd Accident.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 9.—Gottfried Krueger Plum, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Terhune Plum, and a grandson of Judge Gottfried Krueger of Newark, died this morning at his grandfather's country place on the Orange Mountain. Gottfried was running about the yard with his nine-year-old aunt, Dorothy Krueger, a daughter of Judge Krueger, when he suddenly stumbled and fell in the grass. The end of a stick, which he had in his mouth, hit the ground and was forced down the little fellow's throat.

His mother and the nurse girls removed the obstruction with considerable trouble. Dr. Ralph Hudson Hunt of East Orange was summoned and he treated the lad until the arrival of Dr. Edwin Staehlin of Newark, the family physician. It was not thought at first that the wound would prove serious, but yesterday convulsions developed. The little fellow commenced to sink last night and this morning he died in a convulsion.

GOLF CLUB WAITERS SPILLED.

Took Baltusrol Wagon Out for a Midnight Ride.

Special to The New York Times.

SHORT HILLS, N. J., Sept. 9.—A party of ten waiters from the Baltusrol Golf Club, with tin horns and plenty of enthusiasm, started out last night for a drive to Millburn. They had horns which they tooted. They are also said to have cheered. It is even alleged that they sang snatches of song. They had a good time until they reached a sharp turn in the road, when the rear wheel collapsed and the wagon overturned.

Thomas Kinney of New York, the driver, was injured about the arms and head; Stephen Edwards, head waiter, was cut and bruised about the arms and legs, and Edward Jacquot, a son of the club steward, was cut about the face and legs. It is said that the men had taken out the rig surreptitiously during the absence of the stable boss.

Bridge Over Morris Canal Goes Down.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 9.—The old Bloomfield road bridge over the Morris Canal, known as the Silver Lake bridge, collapsed this afternoon under the weight of a heavy truck which was passing over it. The bridge was wooden and apparently rotten; it collapsed completely in the centre and dropped the truck and its driver, John Lenz, into the canal. Lenz was hurt internally and both his legs were badly injured. The truck, with a heavy load of soda water bottles, is still submerged in the canal.

WESTERN MEN'S BETTING COUP

St. Louis Backers Won a Big Sum Over Colonial Girl's Victory.

For the slip in their plans when the St. Louis betting men behind the stable of C. E. Rowe permitted First Mason to win unbacked at Sheepshead Bay ten days ago, the party made amends yesterday when at the same race course Colonial Girl won the Omnium Handicap. Chief among the visitors was Otto Stiffel, the St. Louis brewer, said to be Trainer Rowe's partner and backer, but there were many others who came with Mr. Stiffel, and who might have attracted attention except for the fact that Mr. Stiffel stepped into the limelight by wagering the major part of a stable commission said to amount to $15,000, in person. The St. Louis men got prices ranging from 8 to 1 down to 5 to 1 for all the money they bet. With First Mason as their trial horse for Colonial Girl, and the result of his first effort in the East in mind, the owners bet with supreme confidence, and though the race was one which was productive of unusually heavy speculation, the ring was hit hard, as the St. Louis crowd's winnings were estimated at somewhere about $100,000.

A part of the money found its way back to the bookmakers later on when Sidney C. Love was beaten by Stolen Moments, Sidney C. Love being a reputed "good thing" which caught the fancy of the Western men.

One other coup that failed only through a bit of ill-fortune or carelessness was attempted in the first race, for which Miss Modesty, racing in the name and colors of Albert Simons, was backed heavily. The first backers of Miss Modesty got prices ranging from 60 to 1 down to 20 to 1, but for very small amounts, as the moment there was a decided move to back her the price was cut to 12 to 1, and she went to the post at 7 to 1. At the head of the stretch, when she was well up with Brush Up and Fleur de Marie, and had both of them hard pressed, her headstall slipped through some oversight in bridling her for the race and her jockey lost control of her. Even under this handicap, and fighting against the tangled gear, Miss Modesty was beaten only two heads, finishing third.

PRINCE ALERT'S NEW RECORD.

Pacing Gelding Goes a Mile in 1:59½ Without Wind Shield.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 9.—On an excellent track, but with a fairly heavy head wind in the stretch, Prince Alert this afternoon established new figures for pacing geldings without wind shield, going the mile in 1:59¼. The previous record was 1:59¾, held by himself. With Alta F. McDonald up in place of Jack Curry, who was in Hartford, the gelding went the first quarter in 29¾ seconds, the half in 59, the three-quarters in 1:29¼, and the mile in the time given.

Open Polo Championship Date.

As only two teams have entered for the special open polo championship tournament, but one game will be necessary to decide the event, and the date has been fixed by the Polo Association for Tuesday, Sept. 20. The game will be played on the big polo field at Van Cortlandt Park. The picked teams representing New York and Boston contain the best polo players in this country. The Boston delegation will consist of Foxhall Keene, Joshua Crane, Jr., Devereux Milburn, and R. L. Agassiz. The New Yorkers will be Lawrence Waterbury, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., C. R. Snowden, and J. E. Cowdin.

HURSTBOURNE WAS SECOND

Leaders Had the Race at Sheepshead Bay Between Them All the Way—Four Choices Beaten.

Of all the things that might have happened to shake the complacence of Eastern turfmen, the one that jarred them most was the victory of Colonial Girl in the Omnium Handicap at Sheepshead Bay yesterday over about the best field of handicap horses that could be gathered at this late season.

The race was the fourth on the Sheepshead Bay programme, the Omnium this season being the third of the Autumn Serial Handicaps, one mile and a furlong, or exactly one turn of the Sheepshead Bay course, for three-year-olds and upward. Nine horses were named to run, and but one of the number declined, that being Ormonde's Right. In the betting the entry of Walter B. Jennings, Proper and Dainty, always ruled as the favorite, the great mare of a year ago, Gunfire, being the next choice, with Dolly Spanker the third in favor. Colonial Girl was backed steadily from the opening to the closing of the betting, and from 8 to 1 was sent to the post at 5 to 1. The Western mare's luck was in evidence from the time the riders were announced, she having up as her jockey the clever light boy. W. Davis, also a St. Louis product, and drawing the rail position, where she remained quietly while Hurstbourne, Gunfire, and Proper lunged and plunged for several minutes before a start could be made. When the barrier was lifted Colonial Girl was straight and ready, and in the first jump took first place, and hung close beside the rail for the run to the paddock turn, Hurstbourne having to cross the track from the extreme outside when he made his first move for a good position and ranged up alongside the mare, while Gunfire and Dainty both were jostled at the start, and McChesney, slow to break, was all but left at the post, "Big Mac" having a half dozen lengths or more the worst of the send off. From the first strides there was no lagging, Colonial Girl going at a good pace, attended by Hurstbourne, making the running from end to end, the pair running head and head before the others of the field, closely bunched, around the first turn and into the back stretch, where McChesney joined his field, but, closing on the rail, was shut off there, and once more had to drop back, and take the chance of going around. Just at the bend into the back stretch Hurstbourne showed his head before that of Colonial Girl, but the mare resumed command on the straight of the back stretch, and held first place until they were on the last turn, before heading for the run home. Then again Hurstbourne showed his nose in front, but Colonial Girl, with the advantage of the inside position, went past him in the next two or three jumps, and, hanging on gamely, began to draw away slightly, the difference in weight and the fact that it was Hurstbourne's first race after a year of training, telling against the horse. Colonial Girl, who, after shaking off Hurstbourne, was steadied a bit and won with something in hand by three parts of a length, Hurstbourne finishing second a length and a half before Dolly Spanker, while McChesney, after being badly interfered with, closed with a splendid rush at the end, and was beaten only a head for third place. Time, the time of the race was 1:53 3-5, only a fair performance from a time standpoint. Summary:

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Jockey W. Davis, recently from St. Louis, bounded into sudden prominence at the Sheepshead Bay race track yesterday, when he rode the winners of three races, the last three races on the programme, none of them favorites. Davis has ridden in good form since the meeting opened, but horsemen seemed only to wake up to his skill after his triple triumph, and from the talk that his feat caused, it is likely that he will prove a formidable rival to Hildebrand as he will not lack for choice from now on. Lyne rode two other winners, and Hildebrand had one winning mount.

The Columbia Stable's fast and stout colt Graziallo, while at the starting post in the race won by Beldame Wednesday, was kicked by one of the other horses in the race, and though he went on and ran second, after the race was found to be so severely injured that there is a doubt about his starting for the $25,000 Annual Champion Stakes to-day.

Jockey H. Cochran was suspended for the remainder of the Sheepshead Bay meeting, which means one day, for misbehavior at the start.

post while riding Fleur de Marie in the first race.

The weight on Oiseau for the Great Eastern Handicap will include five pounds extra for his win in the Golden Rod Stakes, making his impost 127 pounds.

Consignments from two private breeding farms will be offered for sale at the Fasig-Tipton paddocks at Sheepshead Bay to-day, the horses to be sold comprising yearlings from the farm owned by the estate of W. C. Whitney, and from the Hurricana Stud of Stephen and John Sanford.

MARINES WIN SKIRMISH MATCH.

Defeat District of Columbia Teams at Sea Girt Rifle Tournament.

Special to The New York Times.

SEA GIRT, N. J., Sept. 9.—The regimental skirmish rifle match was won this morning by the United States Marine Corps by a score of 412. The team that had won it for five successive years—the Second District of Columbia—made 362, and the First District of Columbia 351. The match, being a spectacular one, attracted unusual interest. The teams of six charged the silhouette targets, firing twenty shots at intervals of 600 and 200 yards at both kneeling and prone posture. The prize is a silver trophy valued at $250.

The tyro match went to the Second Troop of Red Bank, N. J., which scored 129, to 128 by Company C, Seventh New York, and 122 by Company I of the First District of Columbia, and Company H of the Second Ohio. The Spencer match was won in the shoot-off this afternoon by Lieut. K. K. V. Casey of the Seventy-first New York from Dr. George E. Cook, Lieut. Benedict, and Private Ben South of Ohio, and Capt. W. B. Martin of New Jersey. At 800 yards, seven shots, in the shoot-off, they dropped out when they made a four. Lieut. Casey made five bull's-eyes. The Seabury long-distance match was won by Lieut. W. A. Tewes of the First New Jersey at 101, with Dr. Cook second, with 101; Capt. Winder of Ohio third, with 98, and Capt. W. B. Martin fourth, with 97.

Local Nationals Won One Game and Tied in Another.

AMERICANS DEFEATED TWICE

Greater New Yorks Dropped Back and Boston Took Lead—No Game for Brooklyn.

The New York Nationals won their ninety-first victory by beating the Philadelphia team yesterday. Two games were to have been played, but darkness stopped the second one after five innings had been played, neither team having scored a run. In the American League the Greater New Yorks suffered two defeats at the hands of the Philadelphia Athletics, and lost the lead to the Bostons, who won from the Washingtons. Summary follows:

New Yorks Win One Game from Quakers—Second a Tie.

Two errors by Donohue, which gave a man first base in each instance, was chiefly responsible for the defeat of the Philadelphia team by the New Yorks at the Polo Grounds yesterday. Both McGinnity and Fraser were wild at times, and their unsteadiness was costly, but the "Iron Man" was overshadowed by the Philadelphian in keeping the hits down, and but for the mistakes of their third baseman and a couple of bases on balls the score would have been two to one in favor of the visitors. In a second game only five innings were played on account of darkness, but in that time no runs were scored, and only one hit was made off Corridon to five off Ames. Both pitchers received credit for hitting batsmen, Corridon sending three to first base and Ames one.

In the first game Umpire Moran did the unusual thing of clearing the Philadelphians' bench of players not participating in the game and sending them off the field. This occurred in the third inning, when the bases were filled and two men had struck out. Moran had called Fraser out on a ball that certainly was higher than his head, and the climax was reached when Thomas took exception to a strike. It seemed as though all the men on the Philadelphia bench shouted and loudly protested against the decision, and Moran at once ordered all the extra men to leave the grounds. There were five in all, including Sparks, the "Evangelist."

The New Yorks played rather loosely and exercised poor judgment at times, one of the conspicuous instances being in the third inning when McGinnity picked up a bunted ball and could easily have thrown out a runner at third, but the base was uncovered. A base on balls, two singles and a double gave the Philadelphians two runs in the first inning, and a base on balls, a single, a bunt and a double produced two more in the second inning. The New Yorks scored two runs in the first inning on a base on balls, Browne's single and a stolen base, Donlin's out and Dahlen's two bagger. After two were out in the third inning a base on balls and a double scored another run. Three unearned runs were made in the sixth on a base on balls, two successive fumbles by Donohue, a safe hit and McGann's long fly. Bresnahan's splendid throw to the plate in the fifth inning, completing a double play, was a feature of the game.

The second contest was sharply played, but base hits were rather scarce. In the five innings finished only five men of the two teams hit safely, and eight men struck out. The scores:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Greater New Yorks Defeated in Two Games at Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9.—The Athletics evened up matters to-day for their double defeat at American League Park in New York last Tuesday by performing the same trick to-day. Powell was pitted against Henley in the first game, and, while the local man received credit for the fewer hits, a wild pitch by Powell in the eighth inning resulted in the loss of the game for New York. The deciding run was made by Pickering, who reached first base on a bunt, and a wild pitch placed him on third. Then Noonan, who took the place of Davis, the latter breaking a small bone in his hand in sliding to base, hit a long fly to the centre field, which Anderson caught on the run, but allowed Pickering to score. The fielding throughout was excellent, the outfield work of Seybold, Hartsel, Keeler, and Dougherty, and Elberfeld's display at short stop, being the features.

In the second game poor fielding and wild pitching by Griffith resulted in the Greater New Yorks' downfall by a score of 5 to 1. The visitors' run was made in the fifth inning by Keeler, who reached first base on a force hit. After Elberfeld had been retired Waddell sent Keeler to third on a wild pitch, and a fumble by M. Cross allowed the runner to cross the plate. The local men scored a run in the second inning on a two-bagger by Seybold, a base on balls, and Schreck's single. In the third Waddell tallied on a single, Ganzel's fumble, and Noonan's force hit. The victory was clinched in the fourth inning when two bases on balls, Schreck's double along the left field foul line, Dougherty's drop of a short hit fly, and McGuire's failure to hold Dougherty's throw at the plate, resulted in three runs being made. The scores.

DETROIT WON AND LOST.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 9.—Detroit and St. Louis again came out even on a double header. The first game was won by the locals, who backed up Donovan's masterly pitching in perfect style, O'Leary covering much ground. Howell's own wildness and Kahoe's bad throw gave Detroit her winning runs.

In the second game Glade had the Detroits at his mercy and shut them out handily. Jaeger, a new pitcher from Rockford, Ill., pitched good enough ball for Detroit, but was unlucky, and runs were scored on scratch hits and errors. Barrett did some fine fielding and Wallace covered much ground. Attendance, 1,200. Scores:

Greater New Yorks Sign Garvin.

Virgil Garvin, late pitcher of the Brooklyn Club, who received the alternative from Manager Hanlon of either accepting a release or being indefinitely suspended and chose the former, has been signed by the Greater New York Club. Garvin was charged, it was said, with insubordination during the last Western trip of the Brooklyns and while Manager Hanlon was absent. After leaving the team he practically signed to play with the Pittsburgs, but Manager Clarke declined to abide by the agreement because it was reported that Hanlon still had a claim on him.

PELHAM BAY ATHLETIC FIELD.

New Public Grounds in Bronx to be Opened To-day.

At Pelham Bay Park to-day Mayor McClellan will formally open the new Pelham Bay Park Athletic Field with a speech of acceptance on behalf of the city, and by afterward raising the American flag on the flagstaff erected in the middle of the field. This is the first athletic field ever owned by the City of New York, and from its inception to its inauguration it has not cost the City of New York one cent, but has been built out of moneys saved from the regular appropriation of the Bronx Park Department. Even the expenses of to-day's ceremonies have been defrayed by a fund of $8,000 subscribed in the Borough of the Bronx, and the great public utility will be thrown open to the public without cost to the municipality, to which it does credit.

The programme will begin at 9 A. M. with the athletic games, for which 400 entries have been received. Almost all the National and metropolitan champions have entered, and some of the foreign competitors at the Olympic games are also expected to compete.

At 2:30 the military and civic ceremonies will begin. Squadron A will act as the personal escort to Mayor McClellan, and the Eighth Regiment, two battalions of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, the First and Second Batteries, the Naval Veterans, and several posts of the Grand Army of the Republic will parade in honor of the city's Chief Magistrate. Park Commissioner William F. Schmitt, to whom the idea and execution of Pelham Bay Park Athletic Field is due, will make a speech on behalf of the Park Department. He will then present it to the City of New York, and Mayor McClellan will answer in a speech accepting the grounds on behalf of the city.

Individual Record Century Run.

The fifth annual individual record century run of the New York State Division of the Century Road Club of America will be held on the Long Island roads on Sunday, Sept. 18. The run will be open to all amateur riders. Each rider will be given a handicap, ranging from scratch to two and a half hours. No pacing will be allowed, except such as may be exchanged by siders entered and covering the entire course. Any rider accepting pace from an automobile, motorcycle, or a rider not entered in the run, or one entered but not covering the entire course, will be disqualified. Single machines only to be ridden.

The start and finish will be at Bedford Rest, Brooklyn, the limit men being started at 7 A. M. From Bedford Rest the course will be via Glenmore or Jamaica Avenue, as preferred, and Merrick Road direct to Amityville, to Massapequa, to Hicksville, to Massapequa, to Amityville, to Massapequa, to Hicksville, to Massapequa, to Bedford Rest. Entries close Sept. 15 with Oscar Lenz, Chairman Racing Committee, 108 East Eighty-ninth Street, New York. In case of rain the run will be held the following Sunday.

Herreshoff Defeats Ormiston in Championship Play.

WILL MEET H. C. EGAN TO-DAY

Hard Fight Looked for in Final Match of National Amateur Tournament at Baltusrol.

Form in golf, so far as it can be based upon past performances, has been fearfully upset this week in the National championship tournament at the Baltusrol Golf Club, near Short Hills, N. J. Every day has been productive of surprises, and yesterday furnished another batch. George A. Ormiston, the Pittsburg golfer, who achieved celebrity the previous day by putting the American and English champion, Travis, out of the running, himself fell by the wayside, being beaten in the morning round by the dashing young Vermont champion, Fred Herreshoff. The latter won handily by 4 up and 3 to play, and the friends of Ormiston could find little consolation for their sorrow. That JAPANESE FIGHTING.

In the remarkable account given yesterday morning in the dispatches of The London Times and THE NEW YORK TIMES from the Japanese Left Army of the operations of Gen. OKU south and southwest of Liao-Yang, American readers learn for the first time in detail of the Japanese mode of fighting in this war. The account, filling four columns of the paper, was rendered by a competent observer, and was intensely interesting.

The sum of this observer's comment is that there was a tremendous and in some degree a useless expenditure of life by Gen. OKU. Three desperate assaults of the strongly fortified Russian positions were made within twenty-four hours without advancing the position of the Japanese appreciably. A fourth on the next morning yielded no better results. Then followed a final effort with the artillery, and at last the Japanese took possession of the city. The estimate of 20,000 is probably a moderate one of the awful loss endured in this stubborn attack, and it is evidently the opinion of our correspondent that much of it was waste. Certainly never before in the history of warfare has such slaughter been incurred with so little immediate advantage. The imagination is staggered at the conception of the utter recklessness of life shown as well by the soldiers as by the commander of the Japanese Army, and their heroism is matched by that of the Russians. It was undoubtedly the purpose of the Japanese Commander in Chief to cut off the retreat of Gen. KUROPATKIN and to force him to surrender or to escape at terrible disadvantage. In the former purpose he failed, and to that extent his awful sacrifices must be held to have been in vain. On the other hand, it is equally plain that the purpose of KUROPATKIN, when he learned that KUROKI had crossed the Tai-Tse, was to attack him, crush him, and return to attack the remainder of the Japanese forces, exhausted and reduced by the five days' continuous assaults upon his works around Liao-Yang. In that purpose he was foiled by the greater swiftness and energy of KUROKI and by his superiority in numbers at the point of meeting.

The obvious result for the Japanese was failure in their large plan. For the Russians it was equally failure in the advantage hoped for from the division of their enemy. The net result, however, was defeat for the Russians and a decided though not a decisive victory for the Japanese. The point selected by KUROPATKIN for a firm stand, which he had fortified in the strongest possible manner, where he had concentrated all the troops available, where he had planned to check the advance of the three armies converging against him, and whence he had hoped to roll them back and close the campaign with a victory that would make Liao-Yang the last point in Japanese progress and the first from which to begin Russian aggression, had to be abandoned. The position which appears to have been impregnable to direct attack was rendered untenable by a flanking movement. Whether the Japanese loss was repaid, whether it was justified by the usual reasoning of military experts, is, of course, a question we are not competent to answer. Clearly it was an awful price to pay, but it was not wholly without return. Actual advantage was secured, and could not have been attained without it. KUROPATKIN would not have abandoned Liao-Yang if KUROKI had not threatened his rear, and KUROKI could not have crossed the river in force sufficient to compel KUROPATKIN to abandon Liao-Yang if the Russians had not been held by the furious and unremitting assaults in front of that city. Had the Japanese contented themselves with slower operations south of the river the Russian position would have grown steadily stronger and the flanking movement would have become more and more difficult. If we consider the alternative and the actual results attained, it is not easy to see how the Japanese mode of fighting can be unqualifiedly condemned. Assuredly no one can read the thrilling dispatches to which we have referred without realising that a nation has arisen as to whom the ordinary calculations of the limits of adventure in warfare do not hold. And the dispatches we publish this morning—not less authentic, and quite without precedent in the reporting of the war so far—confirm this impression.

THE STATE CAMPAIGN.

Col. LAMONT is right. "Any man who now raises the question as to whether a man was a gold Democrat or a silver Democrat or a Cleveland Democrat or a Bryan Democrat or a Douglas Democrat or a Breckinridge Democrat is serving THEODORE ROOSEVELT and not ALTON B. PARKER." This point was emphasized by Judge PARKER in his talk to the Democratic editors. "The cause cannot be advanced by attacks on others within the party with whom we have had disagreements but who are now working with us for a common result," he said; "ordinary prudence forbids the alienation of allies who are willing and anxious to assist." The fact that CHARLES W. GOODYEAR of Buffalo declined to support and vote for Mr. BRYAN in 1900 is, as Col. LAMONT very properly points out, no reason at all why he should not be nominated for Governor by the Democrats this year. There is another and very much better reason why the nomination of Mr. GOODYEAR would be inadvisable. It is understood that he is a supporter of the Dingley tariff, more particularly of the lumber schedule, which he finds useful in his business. He is said to have advocated the imposition of the Dingley duty of two dollars a thousand feet on imported lumber.

We think this is a very good reason for putting Mr. GOODYEAR on the list of unavailables. The inconsistency of nominating a beneficiary of the Dingley tariff for Governor at a time when Democrats are asked to support for President a tariff reformer standing upon a National platform condemning Dingleyism as robbery need hardly be pointed out. It stares every voter in the face. Such an injection of Republican State Socialism into the Democratic canvass would confuse the minds of even fairly clear-headed voters. Judge PARKER believes in individualism. He believes that this country has been made great, not by a few men at Washington, but by the strong arms and sturdy self-reliance of its people. The fact that Mr. GOODYEAR asks the Federal Government to pass a law shutting out Canadian lumber in order that his business may be made more profitable does not make him any worse than thousands of other men who accept this form of assistance from the Government. It effectually puts him out of the race for the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination, however.

Many Democrats will regret that Col. LAMONT has announced that he cannot consent to the use of his name by the Convention. Mr. CLEVELAND'S Secretary of War would be probably the strongest candidate the Democrats could name; at least that is the judgment of some of the wisest and most experienced men in the party. But we believe it has been for some time understood that Col. LAMONT is unwilling to consider the suggestion that he should be the candidate. In an interview reported in The World he now says that under no circumstances could he consent to accept the nomination. While he would evidently look with favor upon the nomination of Mr. GOODYEAR, he speaks with approval of Mr. EDWARD M. SHEPARD as a candidate. It is to Mr. SHEPARD, we think, that enlightened and unselfish Democrats all over the State are now turning. No other Democrat has been mentioned as a possible candidate who would be so helpful to Judge PARKER. There is none more amply qualified both for the labors and exhortations of the campaign and the high duties of the office. Mr. SHEPARD would put vim and vigor into a canvass that visibly drags. He has ideas and brains and force of character. He would put the Democratic canvass upon a higher plane than has been occupied in any election year since 1882. His abilities and his integrity would inspire respect and confidence not alone among Democrats, but among the tens of thousands of independent voters who determine the result of elections in this State.

"This State cannot be carried and Judge PARKER cannot be elected if personal politics are to control," says Col. LAMONT in the interview we have quoted. If "personal politics" control the State Convention, if a small and manageable person shall be put at the head of the ticket, if the machine or any boss or faction subordinates the interests of Judge PARKER'S campaign to the achievement of a despicable purpose to make "personal politics" triumphant at Albany, the State will simply be thrown into the hands of the Republicans as it was thrown there in 1902. The nomination of Mr. SHEPARD would instantly put an end to all talk of personal politics. He would be the sufficing personality, the controlling politician, of his own campaign, just as he would be the unpledged, uncontrolled, upright, faithful, efficient servant of the people if he were elected.

Let us at least save New York.

CHEMISTRY AND INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

Of the several gatherings of men eminent in applied science which will be held in New York during the next few weeks, none will possess a larger measure of interest for the intelligent public than that assembled at the annual meeting of the Society of Chemical Industry. The papers and discussions of such a meeting are likely to be a little beyond the popular comprehension, but the net results are assimilated with avidity. Probably no subject has been as eagerly studied from its popular as well as its scientific points of view as that of radio-activity and the astonishing phenomena, as yet imperfectly understood, which are characteristic of the newly segregated radio-active substances.

Chemistry is nearer the basis of the arts and sciences than any other branch of knowledge. The physicist starts with its discoveries of the composition of matter and builds thereon his hypotheses of the relations of matter and force; the mechanic is dependent upon it in every operation for his knowledge of the materials he employs; the electrician must consult the chemist at every step, and but for the current investigations of the laboratory he would quickly reach the limitations of his art; the civil engineer finds himself more and more dependent upon the light which analysis throws upon the materials available for his creations; the metallurgist would find himself groping in the dark, confronted at every turn with mystery, if the laboratory did not solve his problems from day to day, and almost from hour to hour. Even in the industries which call for what appears to be a purely mechanical treatment of the materials used, the work of the chemist is essential in establishing standards and in determining the effects of manipulation at the temperatures or under the conditions of practical working. The chemist stands between the manufacturer and a thousand errors of judgment which, if permitted to shape his policy, would be likely to lead him far astray. Subjected to the test of the experimentum crucis, truth is established and error refuted.

Experience has shown, however, that not every man who knows the formulae of the books and is familiar with the manipulations of the laboratory is capable of rendering to the arts and sciences the service which is the high function of the chemist. His value depends in great degree upon his imagination. Every fact he chances upon in his exploration among the secrets of nature has its place in the orderly development of civilization and is a contribution to knowledge which is of much or little immediate use according to the capacity of the discoverer to trace its actual or possible relation to other facts. Chemical research along the lines of original investigation seems to be well calculated to stimulate the imagination, and many of those who have attained a front rank in this fascinating field of work are entitled to recognition as the poets of science. All the absurd class distinctions which once separated the student of abstract science from the man who applied his knowledge to useful ends have been abandoned, and that the most advanced and imaginative of original investigators find themselves at home and in an appropriate environment in the company of those with whom chemistry is avowedly a gainful industry, applied to the most practical of ends, shows that the useful is attaining the high plane of the theoretical in science, and that the best employment which can be made of any knowledge is to make it tributary to the uses of mankind in the largest and most commercial way possible.

ANOTHER OBJECT LESSON.

The ending of the meat strike in complete and inglorious failure should teach the wage earner that he cannot afford to follow reckless leaders blindly, and that unless he has a substantial and intolerable grievance he had better seek some other way of righting it than a strike offers.

After eight weeks of idleness, and at a cost estimated at $13,000,000, those of the strikers who can get work are returning to their old places and under the former conditions, which were neither oppressive nor vexatious. Their position is less advantageous than it was before the strike was declared, for the loss by the packers of some $7,500,000 will have to be made up in one way or another, and it will be a good while before they find themselves in mood to be generous with the butchers and other bodies of organized labor. The net result of the strike is the establishment of the open shop in this trade, and it may be this is worth what it has cost. A large proportion of the strikers will find it impossible to get employment, as their places have been satisfactorily filled. Nothing has been gained by either skilled or unskilled labor along the lines of the union demands, and another failure to accomplish the impossible must be recorded. Will leaders of the Donnelly type learn anything therefrom? Probably not; but it is to be hoped that wage earners who are not leaders will discover that loyalty to the union principle does not demand that they shall sacrifice themselves and their families at the beck and call of every self-seeking demagogue desirous of stepping for a moment into the limelight of popular notoriety as a great strike leader.

LOOKING TO PEACE IN THE BUILDING TRADES.

Mr. NASON, who succeeded Mr. WEINSEIMER as President of the Building Trades Alliance, undertook a difficult and almost impossible task, and those who attended the mass meeting of the trades last week and contrasted him with the union leaders who did the speaking may be pardoned for doubting that he has the force to accomplish it. He appears, however, to be honestly striving to find a basis of settlement for the existing difficulties in the building trades, and in this he deserves every encouragement. Any fool can stir up strife and contention and oppose difficulties in the way of an adjustment between a union and the employers; but to find a way out of a desperate position which shall be satisfactory to both parties in interest and permit work to be resumed requires a much higher grade of judgment and a subordination of personal ambition to official duty. We have no doubt that WEINSEIMER was a more popular man with the union leaders than Mr. NASON is. So was SAM PARKS for that matter. But Mr. NASON seems to be a better friend of the wage earner than either of those men, and his willingness to efface himself and minimize the importance of the Alliance to promote peace entitles him to a much higher place in the confidence and regard of the workingmen he represents than either of his predecessors established.

Obstinacy in demanding the recognition of the Alliance as a sovereign power to be dealt with in effecting a settlement of existing differences would be as unwise as futile. If the Alliance exists by reason of its usefulness it will continue to exist whether recognized by the employers or not. If, however, its tenure of life is so uncertain that it depends upon recognition for its continuance, the sooner it dissolves the better. Both the Employers' Association and the Building Trades Alliance can well afford to step aside and let the sub-associations of employers settle differences with the unions. Mr. NASON seems to have had the sense to discover the path of least resistance and is following it.

THE SUNDAY TIMES.

We think that readers of THE TIMES will find to-morrow's issue of more than usual interest. It will certainly arouse the curiosity of our business men that Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY, the distinguished British chemist, should have discovered in the short time he has been with us that our boasted enterprise is not equal to that of the Germans in the line of industry with which he is particularly concerned, and what the same authority has to say of the actual amount and possible force of the radium in existence will also prove interesting.

Of a different character, but not without its touch of intimate sympathy for the soberest reader, is the effort of Count GEZA VON MATTACHICH to defend, at least to explain, his elopement with the Princess LOUISE. On still another line is the account of the success of an American woman in studying the shape of the Sphinx under peculiar difficulties, and securing the data for a model of the immortal and puzzling statue.

Business men, as well as the habitués of Wall Street, may relish the presentation of the exploit of Mr. GATES in the way of absorbing—"convey it the judicious call"—any stray railway left for a brief interval out of sight of its natural protectors, and both classes will find food for thought in the account of the wealth acquirements of the Western farmer. These are some of the more prominent features of the Sunday edition of to-morrow. There are others.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Affronts such as that which has been put by the municipal authorities upon the world-famous scientists now in this city are not so likely to go unnoticed by their victims that there was any real necessity for calling attention to the fact that New York had no official welcome for them, and in most cases the annoyance which such slights inflict, even upon the philosophical, is most easily borne when sympathy takes the form of silence. Even those, therefore, who fully share the indignation expressed by Prof. CHANDLER at the banquet of the Society of Chemical Industry will somewhat regret that he did not assume on the part of our distinguished guests both the ability to understand the situation aright and the generosity not to bring upon us by talking about it the sort of foreign criticism his speech is sure to start. The provocation, however, was extremely great, and perhaps, all things considered, it is as well he spoke as he did. We are bound to be scolded for an inappreciation of these visitors of which only a few of us are guilty, but we fully deserve as much as we get for selecting our municipal representatives from a class the members of which find it "impossible" to appear at a function like this one, though they never lack leisure for participation in the picnics and balls of district leaders. And really, the episode is even more mysterious than humiliating. Of course, a "chemist," to the average member of Tammany Hall, is an unimportant person who performs in the back room of a drug store certain rather effeminate tasks, commendable enough in their way, but with no direct relation to politics or votes. That by these the assembled lights of chemical science would have been first ignored and then snubbed is both comprehensible and pardonable, but Mr. MCCLELLAN and Mr. FORNES, to mention only two of our rulers who found their engagements too numerous and pressing to permit their attendance at the society's banquet, are men of a different type, presumably well aware that chemistry of the sort exemplified by these visitors is the very foundation of three-fourths of modern industries, and that most of those in the other fourth are more or less dependent upon it for success. Their indifference, therefore, to an opportunity for meeting men so truly great as are many of those by whose presence the city is now honored is utterly beyond comprehension or explanation. The foreign papers, a week or two from now, will doubtless make upon the incident comments which a patriotic American will find more interesting than pleasant, and again a statement of facts will have led to wild misconceptions of our civilization. For this reason, and this alone, we could wish that Prof. CHANDLER had held his peace on the subject and contented himself with overwhelming our visitors with evidences of recognition from the many quarters whence he could have obtained it in any desired quantities, of high quality, and without the slightest difficulty.

—Our recent statement that Southerners who make frequent visits to the North show the effects of their trips, among other and more important ways, by abandoning the marked peculiarities of Southern speech, is somewhat warmly contradicted by The Charlotte (N. C.) Chronicle. "The Southerner," it says, "cannot change his speech if he would. The 'intonation' of the Southern speech, as THE TIMES calls it, is soft and sweet in the women—a song, that could never be distorted into a whine. The Southern speech is a thing handed down from father to son and from mother to daughter. It is like a soft, harmonious stroke on a harp. The Northern speech is as different from that as the bang of cymbals. The Southerner losing his accent? Not much. Nor do we believe any considerable number of Southerners who make 'annual trips to the North' attempt to talk like the Northerners do. If they do, they are quite sure to forget their gift when they get back among home folks. If a Southern boy would come back from 'New York,' for instance, and say to his father that he had just returned from the 'North,' the old man might not kill him, but would feel like laying him out." Can it be that we are as utterly mistaken in thinking that no Northerner ever said, not to speak of teaching Southern boys to say, "North," as The Chronicle is in thinking that Southerners, even if willing or eager to do so, are incapable of talking as monotonously—and inaccurately—as their Northern friends? Not only do we know, by actual observation, that Southerners do possess that ability, but we really have the faith to believe that the Chronicle man himself, if he would only spend a few of his vacations in this part of the country, could free himself of the sneer habit of misusing the word "like" as he does in the lines quoted. (That is put in merely for the sake of getting even with him for his unkind reference to the "Noo" of which so many of us are undoubtedly guilty.) And it is not only the Southern white man who learns to talk as we do when he comes here; the Southern negro does the same thing in almost every instance, and that really is queer, since in the South, so far as either race affects the speech of the other, it is the negro, not the white man, that does the affecting. But of course The Chronicle is not serious in its contention. It knows in its heart that isolation, segregation, invariably and in every part of the world, gives the tongue a peculiar twist, and that this twist always disappears at a rate and to an extent directly proportioned to changes in the conditions of life that produced it. These are not questions to argue, with good temper or ill, but facts to recognise.

—There is unusual difficulty in "catching the connection" between the action of Magistrate POOL and the facts on which he based it in the case of the Police Captain who had arrested a truckman for reckless driving. The Captain, not being in uniform at the time, had suffered the usual fate of the undifferentiated citizen, and, despite his signals for the truckman to slow up, had owed his life to his agility. That is the commonest of experiences for everybody not on the police force, but for Capt. SWEENEY it was notable enough to cause him to arrest the truckman and present him in court for punishment. Magistrate POOL, however, was not moved to severity. The matter of the uniform, irrelevant as it seems to the layman, for him had much importance, and to the Captain's mild intimation that even the plain citizen has certain rights in the streets, the Magistrate only said wearily: "Well, I guess we'll have to let the fellow go. When you are not in uniform I guess you'll have to dodge trucks as I do every time I cross a street." It seems to us that Magistrate POOL might have guessed at least once more. His decision will undoubtedly be interpreted by all the truckmen as meaning that plain citizens have no rights—except to dodge—if they venture away from the sidewalk, and what the truckmen have hitherto done by might, hereafter they will be very apt to do under an imagined sanction of the law. The results will be excellent for the undertaking business, but we do not think that otherwise they will be considered generally admirable.

—An American eagle—of peculiar tastes, it must be admitted—visited Brooklyn this week, and, from a sense of the proprieties or because he hadn't time to seek another resting place, alighted upon a church to view the interesting prospect there presented to his stern gaze. The first Brooklynite who sighted the Bird of Freedom rushed for a shotgun and fired twice at him. The Brooklynite was no marksman and the eagle escaped. The escape was gratifying to a civilized mind, but not of so much importance that leisure is not left for considering the very difficult question, "Why did the man try to kill the eagle?" In the first place, success in the attempt would have subjected the man to a heavy penalty for breaking a law, the propriety of which is denied by nobody, and in the second he would have turned a distinctly pleasing spectacle, for himself and others, into one as distinctly saddening to all except utter barbarians. For the dead bird, if he escaped arrest, he might, perhaps, have obtained a few dollars from a taxidermist, but that seems to be a poor excuse for a deed in so many ways despicable as well as reprehensible.

FIRST REAL JOURNALISTIC TRIUMPH OF THE WAR.

From The New York Evening Mail.

At last, through a dispatch to The London Times and THE NEW YORK TIMES, which is the first real journalistic triumph of the war, we know what happened at and around Liao-Yang during the ten days' battle which ended in Kuropatkin's orderly evacuation of the place.

This brilliant story of Liao-Yang—as brilliant, it seems to us, as any battle story of modern journalism, barring not even Archibald Forbes's report of the battle of Plevna—helps us to admire, without quite sympathizing with, the cold Oriental craft with which the official veil is still held athwart this field.

CRISPI'S COMPANION.

Death of Rosalia Montmasson, a Remarkable Woman, in Rome.

From The London Express.

ROME, Aug. 24.—Rosalia Montmasson, the companion of Crispi in his early wanderings, has just died in Rome at the age of eighty-one.

She had a remarkable career. Her father was a sexton, and the only education she received was in the duties of a household. When thirty-one years of age, while employed in laundry work in the prison of Palazzo Madama, Turin, she met among the political prisoners the man who was to be several times Prime Minister of Italy, Francesco Crispi.

A strong affection sprang up between them, and when Crispi was released and went into exile Rosalia followed him, first to Genoa and then to Malta. It was in Malta, while struggling with poverty, that Crispi resolved to legalize their union, and a Jesuit priest performed the ceremony.

Called by his fellow-exiles to London, Crispi was accompanied by his wife, who, gifted with great talent, acted as intermediary between the Italian refugees and Mazzini.

In Garibaldi's daring feat, which made Sicily and the whole of the south part of the new Italy, Rosalia was still with Crispi. She was present at all the actions fought, and at the end of the campaign was decorated with a diamond star.

Then began Crispi's rapid ascent, but his faithful companion, who had bravely faced poverty and danger, proved unequal to the new prosperity.

She became strange in her ways, developed a taste for costly ridiculous dresses, and began to show an inordinate love for animals.

Dozens of dogs, cats, birds, and animals of all kinds invaded the apartments of the no-longer happy pair, and it is said that Crispi's slumbers were often disturbed by the colony of white mice Rosalia would keep.

One day the crisis came. Returning home after delivering a great speech at the Chamber, Crispi found six new green dresses lying about the rooms, and dragging them about were the numerous pets of Rosalia. He left the house never to return.

Crispi married again in 1870, and was charged with bigamy, but the courts held that his first marriage was not valid. He allowed Rosalia an annuity, and successive Governments helped her up to the time of her death.

Library Books Acquire New Value.

From The Cincinnati Enquirer.

William Castro of Terre Haute, Ind., aged 72, under the hallucination that when a person put his hand to the face in a certain manner it was a demand for money, has put $800 in a book or books of the Public Library, having noticed the attendants with hands to their faces. In one instance he put $100 in the "Tale of Two Cities." This was found by the Librarian. The old man does not know where he put the other $300, and patrons of the library are making a search. He drew the money from the bank several weeks ago, and it is thought it was put away the day he obtained it.

APPRECIATES THE TIMES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE NEW YORK TIMES has been for many years a most welcome friend. It represents, successfully, an honest effort to steer a true course of clean journalism. That we could agree with all the ideas of THE TIMES would argue that the reader was but a reflection of the ideas inculcated by the paper. The stand of THE TIMES has been uniformly a high one. It has set its face against the type of littleness in politics, it has supported broad policies, it has indorsed our Eastern policy, it has uniformly applauded Secretary Hay's statesmanship. THE TIMES knows that Secretary Hay's success is largely due to the greater respect foreign powers show to opinions of this country, and that respect has largely been augmented by the evidences of power shown by this Government in its Spanish War. Secretary Hay's efforts and desires would have been the same, but his power to carry out would have been largely curtailed.

I say THE TIMES's position has been and is for progress. Its present position upon the Philippine issue proves this. THE TIMES also, with a perfect consistency, believes in a tariff reform—possibly the tariff issue THE TIMES believes overshadows all others. If the Democratic Party to-day represented Democratic principles, THE TIMES's action in supporting it would be natural and logical. But its support to-day is narrowed by the evasive policy of the so-called Democratic Party, to a support of Judge Parker rather than Mr. Roosevelt, without any defined issue between the Republican platform and the Democratic interpretation of their platform. The attitude of the Democrats upon the vital issue to THE TIMES certainly cannot be construed as representing the views and teachings of THE TIMES. THE TIMES, according to Mr. Parker, can expect no relief if Parker should be elected. Now, in face of the fact that the Democratic Party to-day has no tariff issue, THE TIMES in its defense of this party has to accept as a bedfellow a class of men quite the opposite in cleanliness, (of reputation,) to the usual TIMES ideal.

I doubtless represent one of many readers of THE TIMES who in the earlier stages of the campaign recognised that, to be consistent always, having stoutly supported a belief which was an integral part of Democracy, that THE TIMES should support Judge Parker. Of course the tariff issue was part of Democracy, and that issue would be made a fighting one. Instead there has been a shuffling upon that as upon other issues, and a final settling down upon imperialism as the fighting issue.

Surely our good friend cannot lend itself to a complete reversal of its stand for years. It cannot lend its reputation for honor and truth to indorse a party that denies to-day the principles and tenets which have been its life and soul, and offers instead wabbling, uncertain catch-penny substitutes. The issues which made the Democratic Party dear to the hearts of many, respected by all, are no longer proclaimed, and in their place is tricky evasion. Surely THE NEW YORK TIMES will draw its robe from contact which can but smirch.

CHELSEA PARK OPPOSED.

Middle West Sider Argues for Block Further North.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in to-day's TIMES on "A Chelsea Playground" is most laudable in its sentiments; but many old middle westsiders will not subscribe to all your arguments concerning the site of the playground. All agree that a park in a congested tenement district is not a luxury but a necessity. The play part of such parks, like its aesthetic aspects, is a secondary consideration. It is also demonstrably clear that small parks cannot serve the purpose of keeping children off from the asphalted streets, or act as a mild disciplinary prophylactic against flower stealing from private courts, &c. Furthermore, it is an easily proved fact that only the smallest minority of children in a tenement neighborhood will seek the park as a playground. Consequently, the chief benefit of a park being of a hygienic nature, an air purifying centre, it should be located where it will do the most good for the longest time.

A block somewhere between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets would be a much better choice for a west-side park than the Twenty-eighth and Twenty-seventh Streets block chosen by the Chelsea Improvement Society, because it would serve, as a health plot, the vital interests of a larger number of people for a much longer time. If means were not a consideration, it would be well to locate parks in the centre of every six blocks; but money not being plentiful to that extent, particular care should be taken to choose better than the Chelsea philanthropists are choosing.

THE ANECDOTE ELUSIVE.

Honor to Whom Honor Is Due Not Always Easy to Determine.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to correct an error—such at least is my recollection of the story—in the "Lesson in Courtesy" in your edition of to-day.

More than seventy years ago I heard it told by men who were living at the time this little incident took place.

As they told it, it is to Gen. Washington, and not to Thomas Jefferson, that this lesson in true politeness is due.

As they told the story, Gen. Washington, while walking one day with Gov. Morris, returned the bow of a negro by raising his hat. "What, do you bow to a negro?" was the astonished question of Mr. Morris. "Certainly. Would you have a negro excel me in politeness?" was the characteristic answer of that great man.

HENRY CHAUNCEY.

Tannersville, Penn., Sept. 8, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Splendid! The mere fact that Abraham Lincoln and not Thomas Jefferson was the hero of this episode does not make it less interesting. Will not Mr. E. P. W. now kindly describe to us how Andrew Jackson signed the Proclamation of Emancipation and how Gen. Lee surrendered to Grover Cleveland at Appomattox? YOICKS.

SELECTING A GOVERNOR.

Grout and Cantor Put in Nomination by Times Readers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There has been considerable discussion going the rounds of the Democratic press lately in regard to candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor, and among other names that of Controller E. M. Grout has received favorable mention. It needs no stretch of the imagination to say that if this question were left to the average voter of the five boroughs comprising Greater New York the Controller would have a walk-over for the nomination, which would be followed by a Democratic landslide in November.

E. M. Grout needs no encomiums from any one's pen or pencil, as he is well known as an official of honest thought and action. As a campaigner he is unexcelled, for he has the happy faculty of giving his audience a clearer view of a subject under discussion in a fifteen-minute speech than the average spellbinder would in an oration consuming an hour's time. As a vote-getter he is equally successful, taking his last campaign as a criterion. E. M. Grout's name at the head of the Democratic State ticket would throw consternation into the Governor-Chairman's camp and cause an enthusiasm and vigor among Democratic voters throughout the State that would bring victory on Nov. 8. There is one fly in the ointment—will the differences existing between Messrs. Murphy and McCarren deprive Democracy of Controller Grout's winning qualities as a vote-getter at this important election?

"Let us have peace," and as an evidence of that fact give us Edward M. Grout for Governor, and the intelligent voters throughout the State will do the rest.

OLD-TIME DEMOCRAT.

New York, Sept. 6, 1904.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I agree with your correspondent that New York requires a vote-getter as the Democratic Gubernatorial nominee, and from all the candidates who have been mentioned I cannot find one that would beat Jacob A. Cantor in that respect.

As Mr. Cantor was the only gentleman who received votes at the convention of 1902 besides Mr. Coler, he certainly is entitled to great consideration. I firmly believe that Mr. Cantor could unite all opposing factions, Tammany and anti-Tammany as well as Hill and anti-Hill, and if nominated would greatly strengthen the National ticket in this State.

All Democrats are united on the necessity of carrying New York on Nov. 8; therefore we New Yorkers are pledged to our fellow-Democrats throughout this great country to do all in our power to help place Mr. Parker in the Presidential chair, and, as there is no doubt that Mr. Cantor's nomination would be a thoroughly popular one, and as Mr. Cantor and Judge Parker are old friends and acquaintances, I cannot see why he should not be selected to head the State ticket. A QUESTION FOR RAILROADS.

Why Does It Cost More to Go to Washington Than to Boston?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The mention in THE TIMES of this day of the running of a new train from New York to Boston in five hours causes wonder why the shorter distance (by fifteen miles) from New York to Washington cannot be made in less time, which has not been done as yet by regular trains.

And this thought suggests another. Why, if a ticket from New York to Boston, 235 miles distant, can be purchased for $5, cannot one from New York to Washington, but 225 miles, be bought for less than $5.50, which is the present price?

It is true that an excursion ticket good for ten days only can be purchased for use between New York and Washington, but it is not every would-be passenger who desires to return, if at all, in ten days, and he must, perforce, pay $6.50.

That $6.50 is the price which has prevailed from time immemorial, and, notwithstanding the large increase of traffic between the two cities, has undergone no change whatever. Is it not a short-sighted policy on the part of the railroads going to Washington to maintain so high a charge?

A FREQUENT PURCHASER.

Atlantic City, Sept. 8, 1904.

Bishop Owes $2,500,000.

From The London Express.

VIENNA, Aug. 28.—A sensation has been caused in Hungary by the sequestration of the Roman Catholic Bishopric of Rosenau, owing to the indebtedness of the Bishop, Dr. Ivankovitch, amounting to 2500,000.

The doctor's debts date back to the time before he was raised to episcopal rank, when he fell into the hands of usurers in endeavoring to give financial assistance to his family.

As the revenue of the see is only £8,500, there is no chance of the Bishop being able to satisfy his creditors, and he was recently requested to resign by the Hungarian Government; but he refused on the ground that the pension (£150) offered his was inadequate.

Now that the Government has taken the almost unparalleled measure of sequestrating the Bishopric, the Bishop will probably be forced to resign and to retire to a convent.

The first thing Mr. Henry James did upon his return to America after an absence of twenty years was to go to a Post Office and ask for a 3-cent stamp.

UNCHANGEABLE.

Oh, the world is growing older, but the heart of Love is young;
All the wooing songs we whisper are the songs for ages sung;
And the softly-murmured story in the maiden's ear to-day
Is of Paris' love for Helen, told in just another way;
Cupid's eyes as bright with laughter and the shafts of Merriment
Fly as straight and true as ever; for the barbed arrow sent
Through the heart of lad or lassie driven high or driven low,
Is the same that Cupid tipped with love a thousand years ago.

Oh, the moonlight's spell is changeless and the soft skies overhead
Lead Love's footsteps in the pathway where the steps of ages led;
In the eyes of maidens lifted to the pleading eyes of men
Flash the shyly timid glances that have leaped and died again
When the earth was in its cradle, while the love-impassioned tongue
Tells to Love the blissful story that was told when Time was young;
For the shyly whispered answer, told in trembling tones and low,
Is the speech that tinkled golden on the harp of Long Ago.

And the bowl remains unbroken though the sped years sap the wine;
Though the grapes of Love be gathered, Springtime thrills the budding vine;
And the path by lovers trodden in the ecstasy of song
Is the path the ages followed, through a leafy way and long;
Soft the skies breathe benediction and the muses of the air
Swell and tell a bridal chorus as the troth is plighted there;
'Tis the song through untold ages by the chorused angels sung,
For the world is growing older, but the heart of Love is young.

RED COW VANQUISHES TROLLEY AND "MATTYDOR"

Holds Up Traffic and Charges an Ancient Fighter.

CONSTABLE WAITS IN AMBUSH

Where Flaring Shawl and Stout Club Were of No Avail, Bullet Does the Work.

Daisy, John Whaley's red cow, had long enjoyed a reputation which entitled her to the whole sidewalk when she was minded for a stroll in Freeport, but there is such a thing as getting tired of country life. Yesterday when she saw a New York and Long Island trolley speeding out Main Street she recognized her chance for real fame.

Daisy took the centre of the track at Smith Street and awaited the coming of the car. The motorman rang his gong, but she stood her ground. The car slowed down and at last came to a stop. The cow shook her horns in menace. Three women passengers screamed when they peeped through the front door and saw her. The motorman picked up his switch bar, started to open the gate, thought better of it, and decided to remain behind the shelter of the dashboard. The conductor soon reached the same conclusion and the same refuge.

"Run over her," he suggested to the motorman.

"If we make a move she'll run over us," he replied.

Then the women passengers screamed again. A man leaned over the fence of a near-by yard and looked on interestedly.

"My name's Whaley," he finally said, "and that's my cow. Her name's Daisy. Can't you turn the car 'round and go the other way?"

"Not much, we can't," replied the motorman. "You come and get your old cow. We can't stay here all day."

"You don't know Daisy," Mr. Whaley placidly remarked. "She's sot in her ways when she gets her dander up. She must uv jumped the fence. She's a mighty jumper."

Again the motorman resorted to his gong, while Daisy watched the proceedings with a nasty gleam in her eyes. The clanging brought other Freeporters to their fences. Jacob Smith, seventy-one years old, and a Union veteran, decided that he would take a hand in the game.

"I ain't a-goin' to see a whole railroad held up by one cow," he finally announced, and placed his hands on the top of the fence, as if to vault to the street.

"Here, you, Jacob," called a sharp voice from the house, "if you're goin' to tackle that cow, take these."

Mrs. Smith ran to her husband's side, bringing a big red shawl and a stout stick. Mr. Smith draped the red shawl over his left arm and grasped the cudgel tightly in his right hand.

"Now you're a reg'lar mattydor," admiringly said Mrs. Smith. "Guess you could lick a barnyard full of cows."

"You've got another guess comin'," muttered John Whaley, grimly. "But far be it from me to interfere with the obsequies."

Mr. Smith vaulted the fence and was ready for battle. "My, but he's sprightly," said one of the beleaguered women passengers; "if he does seem a little old."

Daisy saw Mr. Smith, but pretended that his movements did not concern her. The veteran volunteer completed a smartly executed flank movement and rapped her sharply on the ribs. When Daisy turned on him he waved the red shawl in her face.

"That's right," shouted Mrs. Smith. "That's the way the mattydors fight cows in Spanish."

Evidently, however, Daisy did not know the rules. Instead of becoming bewildered she charged her assailant, and swept him off his feet and into the underbrush on the side of the road. When he tried to get up she calmly knocked him down again, keeping watch on the car, meanwhile, to see that it did not escape her.

"Cowards!" shrieked the women passengers. "Would you see our savior killed? Is there no man among you who is armed?"

John Raynor, constable of Freeport, reached the scene in the nick of time to answer the appeal. Sternly he advanced upon Daisy.

"In the name of the law," he said, and drew his revolver. Daisy turned her gaze in his direction. He jumped the Smith fence and ambushed himself.

"Everybody out of the way," he shouted. Then he opened fire, and Daisy was made into beef.

Mr. Smith, badly bruised, was carried back to his house. John Whaley stood mournfully over the body of Daisy.

"I'll sue Freeport for damages," he said. The trolley car, an hour late, sped on its way.

"A GIRDLE ROUND THE WORLD."

Answers to the Geographic Congress's Midnight Telegram.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The Geographic Congress was entertained to-day by the reading of many cablegrams received from all parts of the world in reply to the international messages of greeting sent out last night after the flashing of the midnight time signal from the Naval Observatory. The replies came in French, Spanish, and other languages, and all breathed cordial sympathy with and interest in the work of the geographers here.

From the City of Mexico came a dispatch from Felipe Valle stating that the signal was received 36-100 of a second slow. At Toronto the signal was 23-100 of a second slow, while at the Mare Island Navy Yard it arrived 32-100 of a second early according to the coast chronometers.

Last night's signal was sent on its journey in two directions, one via the Pacific cable and the other via the Atlantic. A cablegram from Adelaide, Australia, contained the information that the two signals had met there exactly 14 seconds after being sent from Washington.

The Madras, India, observatory acknowledged the time signal, as did the Lisbon, Portugal, observatory, which cabled its best greetings to "the world-famous United States observatory." "Cordial salutations and felicitations" came from Quito, Ecuador, and also from the Cordova, Argentine Republic, observatory.

RECEPTION TO CHEMISTS.

New York Coworkers Entertain Distinguished Visitors at Hotel Majestic.

The New York section of the Society of Chemical Industry held a reception last night at the Hotel Majestic, at Seventy-second Street and Central Park West, in honor of Sir William Ramsay and other European members of the organization.

A large number of women relatives and friends of the chemists were present, the affair being under the direction of Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, Chairman of the General Entertainment Committee. The reception was to have been held on the roof garden of the hotel, but owing to the rain the parlors on the second floor were used instead.

To-night the society will have a smoker at the Liederkranz, on East Fifty-eighth Street, which all members are expected to attend.

THAT APPETITE OF JOHNNY'S.

Blasted in the Bud a Flower of Wild West Trips.

How the all-consuming appetite of Johnny Dougherty of One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Street and Stebbins Avenue, in the Bronx, wrecked as fair a Wild West project as was ever evolved from the reading of "Sam, the Scout; or, The Last of the Arapahoes," or the like, was the subject of sixteen-year-old Charley Meyer's story in the Tombs Court yesterday. Charley worked for a company at 416 Broadway. On Aug. 27, he admits, he appropriated $120 that belonged to the concern. Then the two journeyed to the wilds of Sullivan County and trouble arose.

Dougherty, according to Meyer, was always eating, and at one time ate as many as eleven beef stews at a single sitting. That cost money.

There was a conference of war.

"I tell you what we'll do," said Meyer; "let's cut out one meal a day."

"All right," said Dougherty. "What meal will it be?"

"Let's make it breakfast," said Meyer.

"Oh, I couldn't go without breakfast," said Dougherty, in terror. "I always feel faint when I get up in the morning."

"Well, let's eat a good breakfast and go without dinner," suggested Meyer.

"I always feel hungry in the middle of the day," said Dougherty. "I don't believe I could get along without dinner, nohow."

"Make it supper, then," said Meyer, in desperation.

"What! Go to bed on an empty stomach?" exclaimed Dougherty. "Gee! I never could get to sleep."

Meyer gave up the argument in despair, but he stoically shut off Dougherty's commissary supplies by ordering meagre meals for him. Then Dougherty wrote to his parents for money to come home on. The letter furnished a clue to the whereabouts of the boys, and Detective Sergeant Foye was sent after them. They, however, had left Sullivan County when he arrived. He traced them to Malden, Mass., and, going there, caught them, their money about gone, bemoaning the shattering of a youthful dream and Dougherty almost crying with hunger. Foye bought them a square meal. No crime could be charged against Johnny Dougherty, and he was permitted to go home. Charley was taken to the Tombs Prison to await the action of the Grand Jury.

TO BURN SLOCUM FUND RECORD

Out of Consideration for Those Who Received Charity.

The Slocum Relief Committee, which has had charge of the funds contributed for the survivors of the disaster, was dismissed at a meeting held yesterday afternoon in Mayor McClellan's office. Herman Ridder, the Chairman, proposed that the committee's report and all other documents referring to the disaster be examined by an expert accountant and referred to the Mayor, after which they should be burned, instead of being preserved among the public records.

"We do not want the children of those who have been benefited," said Mr. Ridder, "to feel in after years that their parents have been the recipients of public charity." The proposition was carried.

On behalf of the people of New York the Mayor thanked the committee as a whole for its efforts.

"While," he said, "it would scarcely be right for me to single out any member for special mention, I think you will agree with me when I say that the success of this committee in its very trying and delicate work has been due in very large measure to the constant, unfailing, good temper, courtesy, tact, and masterful executive ability of your Chairman, Herman Ridder."

A sub-committee, composed of Herman Ridder, Gustav Straubenmiller, and H. R. Scharmann, was appointed to take charge of the money, about $30,000, which is still undistributed.

OBSERVING JEWISH NEW YEAR.

Work Ceases and Services Will Be Held in All Synagogues To-day.

Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, 5665, began last night at sunset. It is the most holy day of the year to the Jews, with the single exception of the Day of Atonement, which comes ten days later. This festival is also known as the Feast of Trumpets, as the blowing of the ram's horn is the most solemn rite of the service.

Clothed in a spotless linen garment, the rabbi chants a benediction, to which the congregation responds with loud "Amens." Then the rabbi blows the shofar, or ram's horn, nine times, and the congregation completes the rite with another prayer. The orthodox observe two days, but the reformed branch observes only one.

No work or business is carried on, and man and beast are at rest during this yearly festival, for it is believed that on Rosh Hashanah God judges the universe and decrees the fate of every living creature. This sentiment is expressed in the most solemn single prayer of the day known as the U-ne-tanneh Tokef, so called because the prayer begins with these words. This prayer will be recited in all the synagogues to-day and to-morrow.

The Ellis Island authorities, in accordance with the usual custom, have arranged for the celebration of Rosh Hashanah.

JIMINEZ TIRED OF FIGHTING.

Leaves Santo Domingo and Says He Has Done with Revolutions.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Unofficial advices received here record the departure from San Domingo of Gen. Jiminez, whose political aspirations have been the principal factor in fomenting and continuing revolutionary disturbances in Santo Domingo.

It is understood that Gen. Jiminez has just arrived in New York and that before departing from Santo Domingo he publicly announced himself as tired of revolutions and without intention of connecting himself with one again.

THE RUSSO-GERMAN TREATY.

Its Provisions Kept Secret Until Others Have Been Negotiated.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—United States Consul General Mason writes from Berlin as follows:

"The treaty of commerce between Russia and Germany, which has been in negotiation during the past year, was signed at Berlin on the afternoon of July 28 by the Imperial Chancellor, Count von Bülow, and Mr. Von Witte, President of the Ministerial Committee of Russia.

"In view of the peculiar and highly important commercial relations existing between the two countries, the negotiation of this treaty presented unusual difficulties. Russia, on the one hand, insisted upon favorable rates for her wheat, rye, timber, cattle, horses, poultry, and eggs, all of which products the German Agrarians, in whose interest the tariff of December, 1902, was enacted, are interested in excluding or handicapping with high rates of duty. On the other hand, German industrial interests demand favorable terms of import into Russia for machinery, iron, steel, paper, chemicals, textiles, and various other articles which Russian manufacturers are striving under many difficulties to produce, and which are therefore especially exposed to competition from abroad.

"For these and other reasons the compact with Russia has been recognized from the first as probably the most difficult of all the treaties that would have to be negotiated under the new tariff, and its com-

TIBET NOW IS UNDER CONTROL OF BRITAIN

Col. Younghusband and Native Officials Sign Formal Treaty.

NEW DALAI LAMA PROBABLE

Flight of Present Pope-King Considered as Amounting to Abdication—Tashi Lama May Succeed Him.

LHASA, Sept. 7, via GYANGTSE, Sept. 9.—Col. Younghusband, head of the British mission, and the Tibetan officials signed a formal treaty to-day in the apartments of the Dalai Lama at Potala.

The ceremony was simple, and was conducted amid quaint and picturesque surroundings. The terms of the treaty were read out only in the Tibetan language, and its details will be published later by the Foreign Office at Simla. The proceedings closed with a short speech by Col. Younghusband.

The Dalai Lama is now supposed to be well on his way into Mongolia, and the officials insist that his action amounts to abdication. The administration is carried on by a council of regency. It is believed that the Tashi Lama will eventually be recognized as the supreme religious head.

The arrangements for the return of the British mission are complete.

The flight of the Dalai Lama and the conclusion of an Anglo-Tibetan treaty mark the elimination of the last vestige of Russian influence and the firm establishment of British control in Tibet. The belief that the Tashi Lama will be recognized as the supreme religious head of the country is well founded, for Tashi Lama has been held up by the British as a menace to the Pope-King and his advisers at Lhasa. It is probable that he holds sentiments friendly to the Indian Government.

The Tashi-Lama is abbot of the large monastery at the western capital of Tibet, Tashi-lumpo or Shigatze, from which he takes his title, and is second in importance only to the Dalai Lama. As he has practically no temporal duties to perform, he devotes himself almost exclusively to spiritual matters, and has such a reputation for piety and erudition that he is styled "The Great Gem of Learning."

The "eloquent, noble-minded Tubdan," who forsook Lhasa on the approach of the British, was born in 1876, is without any experience of the outside world. He has been surrounded by counselors who made a tool of him for their own ends. The one who exercised most influence over him was Lama Dorjieff, his favorite tutor, a Russian Mongolian subject by birth, (having been born on the shores of Lake Baikal.) Dorjieff was educated in Russia, and twenty years ago settled in one of the convents of Lhasa, where he acted as agent through whom the Peter's Pence of his tribe of Tartars was paid to the Lhasa Exchequer. In this way he became a power and succeeded in destroying the influence of China, which prior to his advent had been paramount. He is fifty-five years old, has traveled much in the East, and is a well-educated man and a member of the Russian Geographical Society.

It is a curious fact in connection with the establishment of British control in Tibet, with all that it portends, that long years ago it was prophesied that the reincarnation of Buddha in the person of the Grand Lama would cease after his thirteenth transmigration. The Dalai Lama who has fled into Mongolia is the thirteenth Lama since the incarnation myth was first started for his own purposes and upheld by force of arms by Lozang the Eloquent.

PRINCESS LOUISE'S THREATS.

To Protect Her Fortune She Menaces Four Courts with Revelations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg is now in Paris, and, according to her spokesman and prospective publisher, Henri de Noussanne, she is endeavoring to come to an amicable arrangement with her royal parent and Ducal husband as to the disposition of her fortune.

M. de Nousanne tells me that the revelations she is in the position to make are of so grave a nature and implicate such exalted personages that her demands will certainly be granted on condition that she remains silent.

What she practically purposes to do is to hold up the Courts of Berlin, Brussels, Saxe-Coburg, and Vienna on threat of the most scandalous revelations. Her own hope is that this policy will succeed.

DEFEND WALDECK-ROUSSEAU.

Family Will Publish His Private Papers to End Controversy.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—The family of the late M. Waldeck-Rousseau have issued a statement announcing that owing to the controversies which have arisen since the death of the former Premier concerning his change of conviction relative to the religious orders, they purpose to publish his private papers demonstrating that during and after his Ministry he remained invariably faithful to the same political doctrines.

This action, it is explained, is taken not in a spirit of controversy, but to establish the truth.

ENGAGES MISS BESSIE JOHNSON

Charles Frohman Gives Part to Daughter of Cleveland's Mayor.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 9.—Miss Bessie Johnson, daughter of Mayor Tom L. Johnson, is to enter the professional stage this season, and has already signed a contract with Charles Frohman for a prominent part in a play he is to produce. This announcement, made in New York several weeks ago and then denied, was confirmed by the family of Miss Johnson this afternoon.

Miss Johnson begins her career with the full consent of the Mayor and his wife, and her friends here predict a success for her from the start.

Gave Performance for Savage Employes.

At the request of Henry W. Savage the company which will present the new George Ade comedy "The College Widow" gave a special performance at the Garden Theatre yesterday afternoon for the amusement of four of the Savage companies now in New York. The audience was composed solely of persons on Mr. Savage's payroll. "The College Widow" company will leave this morning for Washington, to open at the Columbia Theatre on Monday night. The company will return and begin an indefinite engagement at the Garden Theatre on Sept. 20.

LAST SIDE CRUSADE TO HALT REIGN OF ROUGHS

Business Men Organize and Will Appeal to McAdoo.

PLAN TO ACT THEMSELVES

Women Afraid to Venture on Streets Because of Law Breakers—Special Policemen Demanded.

More than a score of east side business men met yesterday afternoon in a room in the Bowery Bank Building, at Grand Street and the Bowery, to protest against the increase of crime in their locality. As a result of the meeting a committee was appointed to see Commissioner McAdoo and urge him to take special action. If the Commissioner fails to take the desired steps members of the new association declare that they themselves will see to the enforcement of the laws.

Louis Gordon of 159 Canal Street last night said that all the lower east side streets, especially Grand, Hester, Forsyth, Eldridge, and Canal Streets, were crowded with young roughs, who have made the locality unsafe that young women are afraid to venture out alone at night.

"It seems impossible that such things can take place in a city like this," he continued. "The respectable people of the east side feel that something must be done to protect their wives and daughters. We organized that something might be done, and we will see that the right thing is done. A committee will see Commissioner McAdoo on Tuesday or Wednesday and tell him of the conditions existing in our locality.

"If he does not aid us, why, we will act. Special policemen should be assigned to certain streets to suppress these offenders. If they are not seen there, why we ourselves will act as special policemen, and will see that the present attacks on women are not continued."

When Mr. Gordon was asked if he thought that the old "cadet system" had been revived he replied:

"As to that I cannot say. Certain sections of groups of men which I have seen make me believe that the old system might have started. I have confidence, however, in the leaders of the district and I do not believe that they would allow it."

At the meeting yesterday afternoon speeches were made by all those present, and resolutions were adopted calling for a meeting the first of next week. Those who comprise the committee to see Commissioner McAdoo are Louis Gordon, Julius Blumberg of 230 Canal Street, Arthur Goldstein of 84 Eldridge Street, Joseph D. Edelson of 134 Henry Street, A. L. Apellas of 54 East Broadway, Bernard Evey of 140 Henry Street, and Dr. B. Lazarus of 62 Canal Street.

IN THE SHOPS.

A bargain worth while for the housekeeper is in novelty white swiss muslin that was selling up town the other day for 12½ cents a yard. Part of it was in designs of bread dotted stripe, with a narrow stripe formed by hair lines. There were various dot patterns, some of fleur-de-lis and others of Empire wreaths, all exceedingly pretty for draperies and at much below the original price.

***

Other bargains were in fancy curtains of various kinds, which were selling for much less than the regular price. One pair of Marie Antoinette draperies of heavy ecru net with braid-embroidered designs, was $4.50. That is very low for an excellent, durable curtain, and a handsome one.

***

Tabourettes in burnt wood, some of them very good, others not as desirable, are selling for $1 and $1.50. Both sizes are pretty and useful for plant stands. The higher-priced ones are a little taller and a little larger, but the small ones would hold a good-sized flower pot.

***

Other things in burnt wood and some, also, very good, are footstools at $1 each. These are the square-cornered variety, the top about twice the length of the width, made like those of olden days.

***

An odd shape in a big water or milk jug is in the form of a man sitting upon a stump holding in his hands a water jar. The small, round mouth of the jar is the nose of the pitcher, and there is a handle at the back. The thing is unique, but it can hardly be called more than that.

***

Pretty and serviceable cups and saucers and china sale are decorated in a pretty rose design, a line of roses around both cup and saucer, and a little cluster of roses on the inside of the edge of each cup. Cups and saucers are 10 cents each.

***

A pretty young girl's suit is hygienic. It is made in one piece, three boxplaits running from the neck and shoulders to below the waist, and with a belt and turnover collar with brown tie. It is a style usually seen on small children, but pretty, nevertheless, in the larger size. It costs $11.50 and is one of the new Fall models. Another gown is similarly made, but the waist has three boxplaits and the skirt is plaited all around.

***

Rob Roy plaids are to be found in silks, and are varied with figures of various kinds. There are woven dots and rings and small figures, some in red—what may be called an invisible figure—and others in black. The red and black checks are all small, but vary a little in size in the different pieces of silk.

***

Lace rosettes are found on the first displays of Fall hats, and they are pretty. The foundation is of chiffon or what not; it does not show, only the top being edged with cream Valenciennes lace. The rosettes are large, and one or two may be used at a time. They are pretty on brown hats, the creamy tint blending with the darker color.

***

New silk waists are trimmed with leather. One of these is simply made of a soft blue, on the order of the cadet, and with collar, cuffs, and a little tie of the natural-colored leather. It costs $7.50. A brown silk waist is similarly trimmed and costs the same.

***

Those little jackets which for some purposes take the place of the sweater are usually trimmed with ribbon. One which has rather a pretty effect is the usual white woven worsted ornament, finished around the edge with bands of purple ribbon.

***

Stationery for card party invitations is now new, but is always useful. It has at the top of each sheet a hand of cards, and below the words: "A Full House." The paper is 75 cents a box.

***

There are innumerable packs of cards put up in cases having the appearance of Prayer Books. Something different is a case made the size and shape of one for cigars. This can be used for cigars after it has done duty for cards.

To Bring Dr. Lorimer's Body Home.

AIX-LES-BAINS, France, Sept. 9.—The Rev. George Lorimer, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, who died at the Hotel Regina here yesterday, had been suffering from an affection of the lungs. George Horace Lorimer of Philadelphia, son of Dr. Lorimer, and his wife, have arrived here. They will take the body of Dr. Lorimer to New York on the White Star Line steamer Teutonic, which sails from Liverpool next Wednesday.

ARTICAL WOMAN CLIMBS THE

COLONEL ASTRAY ON BOWERY.

Kentuckian Says Liquor There Was Not Like the Home Brand.

Dr. Michael Flood of Louisville, Ky., said to have been a Colonel in the Confederate Army, was arraigned in the Tombs Court yesterday before Magistrate Pool on a charge of intoxication.

"If you are from Kentucky, as you say," asked the Magistrate, "how is it that you got drunk? I understand that Kentucky gentlemen drink, but never become intoxicated."

"It is true, your Honah," was the reply, "that I am accustomed to drinking Kentucky whisky, but the stuff that they serve for Kentucky whisky on that Bowery of yours is not the genuine goods by a long sight. I only had a few drinks, but they certainly made me drunk."

"What would you do if I were to discharge you?"

"I'd get into a cab and go straight to 71 High Street, Brooklyn, where I am visiting."

"Officer"—this to the policeman who made the arrest—"call a cab for this man, arrange for the fare in advance, tell the Colonel what he must pay, get the cabman's number, and tell him not to stop at a single saloon on the way."

DOGFISH PEST IN CANADA.

Government Plan to Rid Coastal Waters of the Nuisance.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—W. R. Holloway, United States Consul General at Halifax, N. S., reports that the Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries has determined on a plan to rid coastal waters of the dogfish pest that has been causing such havoc among the fisheries during the last few seasons. After considering the proposal for a Government bounty on dogfish, to encourage the fishermen to exterminate the species, the Minister has concluded that this method offers no prospect of complete success, and has decided, instead, to establish three reduction plants to convert the fish into fertiliser and glue.

One will be erected in Northern New Brunswick, another will be on the southern coast of Cape Breton, and a third will probably be on the Magdalene Islands. They will cost $9,000 each, and the Government will itself operate them, paying the fishermen a good price for their fish offal and for all the dogfish they can bring in. The Minister is satisfied that the venture can be made to yield a satisfactory profit.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Judge Kirk Hawes.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—The sudden death is announced of Judge Kirk Hawes at his Summer home in Les Cheneaux Islands. For nearly forty years Judge Hawes had been a prominent figure in Chicago, and for twelve years he served on the Superior Court bench of Cook County. He was born in Brookfield, Mass., Jan. 5, 1839, and was a brother of Mrs. Mary J. Holmes, the author. In the Presidential campaign of 1880, Mr. Hawes opposed the third term movement in favor of Gen. Grant. He and Robert G. Ingersoll opposed the Grant forces at the Springfield State Convention, were successful, and thereby had much to do with the result of the National Convention. Judge Hawes was one of the organizers of the Union League Club and a member of the Sunset Club, the Nineteenth Century Club, the Marquette Club, and the Chicago Bar Association. He was a student of Egyptology and spent a great deal of time and money collecting.

John F. Lee.

Special to The New York Times.

BAYONNE, N. J., Sept. 9.—President John F. Lee of the Bayonne Board of Education, died last night, aged twenty-nine years, of typhoid fever. He was a leader in local Democratic politics. He was acting Police Recorder and had been five years in the Hudson County Registers Office as Under Clerk. One brother, Assistant City Clerk William F. Lee, and two sisters, Misses Margaret and Mary Lee, with the parents, survive him.

Obituary Notes.

Mrs. JOHN C. MILLIGAN of South Orange died yesterday at her home, on Ridgewood Road. Mrs. Milligan was born in New York and was sixty years of age.

Dr. EDWARD P. BUFFET died at his home, 804 Bergen Avenue, Jersey City, yesterday of heart failure. He was born in Smithville, L. I., on Nov. 7, 1833, his mother being Miss Nancy Rogers, a descendant of John Rogers of Puritan fame.

Daughter of Late Jesse Seligman Dead.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Sept. 9.—Miss Alice Frances Seligman, daughter of the late Jesse Seligman, died this morning after a lingering illness. Two years ago she was stricken with paralysis, and a complication of diseases followed. Her father was associated for many years with James Seligman in the banking business. The body will be taken to New York on Sunday and placed in the Seligman private vault.

Answer to a Correspondent.

Mr. Howard—Two organizations are engaged in caring for old horses that are pensioned. The Equine Provident Society, Dr. Kartenstein, manager, 58 West Thirty-fifth Street, has a large farm on Long Island for the purpose. The Bide-a-Wee Society, Yonkers, N. Y., also expects to care for horses in addition to the dogs and cats now under its charge.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Low pressure covers the West, except on the North Pacific Coast, and in consequence abnormally high temperatures prevail during Friday in the slope region. At Huron, S. D., the maximum temperature was 106 degrees. Further west the temperatures have begun to fall and are once more below the seasonal average. In the East there has been little change, except in New England and the Middle States, where it was somewhat cooler.

On the New England Coast winds will be light to fresh northeast, becoming variable by Sunday; on the Middle Atlantic Coast they will be light to fresh northeast to southeast; on the South Atlantic Coast they will be light to fresh and mostly northeasterly; on the Gulf Coast light to fresh south; on the upper lakes light south, and on the lower lakes light to fresh southeast to south.

Steamships departing Saturday for European ports will have fresh northeast to east winds, with partly cloudy weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY AND SUNDAY.

Eastern New York—Partly cloudy Saturday, warmer in the interior; Sunday fair, warmer; fresh east to south winds.

Eastern Pennsylvania, fair, warmer Saturday and Sunday; light to fresh east to south winds.

New Jersey, fair Saturday; Sunday fair, warmer in interior; fresh northeast winds, becoming southerly Sunday.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

H. A. JONES'S NEW COMEDY.

"The Chevaleer" a Clever Character Study—Bourchier in Title Role.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The London theatrical season opened on Saturday with the first performance of Henry Arthur Jones's new comedy, "The Chevaleer," at the Garrick Theatre.

Although the plot of the comedy is sufficiently entertaining, its chief interest lies in the character study of the principal, the Chevaleer himself. The part played by Arthur Bourchier is that of a successful showman, who, as he smilingly announces in the course of the play, bestowed the title of Chevaleer upon himself "for distinguished services." At the time of the first act the Chevaleer is engaged in celebrating his past triumphs and drinking to those in the future at the hospitable Woolpack Hotel. In his enthusiasm he gets far beyond the limits of sobriety, and his companions, made somewhat jealous by his boastings, tie him up in a tarpaulin and deposit him helpless under the table.

There he lies, sleeping, while an impassioned dialogue takes place between Lady Anne Kelload and Charlie Inskip. It appears that Lady Anne, whose husband is of an "awkward" temperament, has had a disagreement with that gentleman over the trifling question of how they shall celebrate the approaching centenary of a family hero, "Inkerman" Kellond, a gallant Crimean officer. Consequently, the lady is spending the night quite innocently away from home, and, unfortunately, meets at the Woolpack Hotel a weak-kneed youth, Charlie Inskip, who fancies himself in love with her. Lady Anne, who has a tongue of her own, is engaged in giving him a bit of her mind, and is just announcing her intention of returning to her husband's roof without delay, when the Chevaleer under the table snores.

He has unconsciously chosen the psychological moment to announce his presence, and Lady Anne, thinking he has heard everything, considers herself ruined. Meanwhile the showman awakes, and the terrified lady attempts to make terms with him not to betray her. He, quite unaware of the cause of her sudden interest in himself, imagines she is fascinated by his personal charms, and bows and simpers coyly. It is arranged between them that he shall undertake to arrange the celebration of the centenary which caused all the trouble in the first place.

The husband of Lady Anne has also a secret of his own, and from some chance observation of the Chevaleer's he imagines that he is discovered as well, while Mrs. Fulks-Meesom, a frisky friend of Lady Anne, comes under his sway through his supposed knowledge of one of her escapades. The Chevaleer all the time

FINANCIAL.

The Treadwell and Its Enemies.

The GEORGE A. TREADWELL MINING COMPANY has no enemies except

1. Curbstone brokers who have been rash enough to allow themselves to be caught short of the stock on a rising market and who are sometimes frantic in their efforts to saddle their losses on some one else.

2. Papers and publications who are sore because we have not appreciated at their own valuation their merits as advertising mediums.

3. Existing copper producers who may perhaps be pardoned for not welcoming so virile a rival in the field of copper production.

On the other hand the friends of the TREADWELL are many and strong. They are the people who have watched the progress and steady growth of the enterprise from the beginning of its operations until it has now reached the point where it is so soon to be numbered among the great copper producers and dividend-payers of the country. Many of them have gone to the trouble of visiting the property itself and have seen with their own eyes its value. After carefully investigating the merits of the stock as an investment they have shown their faith by their works and put their money into it repeatedly and without hesitation. Of the 1,663 TREADWELL stockholders at this date many are experienced and hard-headed investors who are slow to be convinced, but being convinced stand by their guns to the end. Many are business men, bankers and experts who have used their careful and deliberate business and professional judgment in making the investment. All have invested because on investigation they found it to be the best investment they could make, and they all expect to realize ten dollars or more for every dollar invested. We are quite likely to do better by them even than they expect.

The TREADWELL is proud alike of its friends and its enemies. Both are alike useful to it. Its enemies play the part of drawing public attention to the enterprise by saying things about it that can be so easily answered. Its friends do their part by standing by it through thick and thin and by investing their own money in it and recommending it to their friends.

And so it is that during three years of almost unparalleled business depression, while other properties have been going to the wall and their stocks going down and down, the TREADWELL has kept on in the even tenor of its way, growing stronger every day, and every day getting nearer and nearer to the dividend-paying point. Its stock has been climbing upwards almost uninterruptedly and winning steadily the confidence of the investing public because it deserves that confidence.

Only a little more of the stock is for sale to complete the smelter plant and equipment. When that is completed and the Company is on a dividend-paying basis, as it will be at an early date, the stock is likely to sell for several times its present price.

DENVER & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

NOTICE OF SALE OF SECURITIES UNDER GENERAL MORTGAGE OF DEC. 1, 1899.

Holders of more than a majority of the bonds of the Denver & Southwestern Railway Company secured under its general mortgage of December 1, 1899, to the undersigned Trustee, having heretofore elected to declare the principal of their bonds immediately due and payable, by reason of default in the conditions of said mortgage and in the non-payment of the interest due thereon, and the continuance of such default for a period excee

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 1.

Buying Still Better Than Selling, and Prices Show No Interruption to Their Rise.

There is still no change in essentials to chronicle regarding the stock market as a whole. General strength, with variations in relative activity and improvement in detail, is all that is to be said of the market's entity. Unsympathetic critics call this taking profits in one section under cover of manipulation for the rise elsewhere. It would be hard to say just what sort of bull market would suit the bears. To those who strive to be neither bulls nor bears, but mere observers and recorders, it would seem that a normal market would and should act that way. It is natural that yesterday's laggards should be to-day's performers, and that stocks which have risen should suffer from realizations, and yield place to others entitled to their distributive share of the advance. Certainly stock markets fail in that way, and there is no apparent reason why they should not rise that way without reproach.

Yesterday's record of new maxima for the year includes forty descriptions. Of declines there was none worth mentioning as significant, except Metropolitan Securities. Reading continues the market's leader, the dullness of the coal trade having no influence. Rock Island sprang into second place in activity and strength, its loss in July of $457,012 net being as stimulating as the trade disturbance is to Steel, which yesterday sold through 64 so easily that those who have been expecting a break at 65 now push the breaking point some units higher. Metropolitan, which has enjoyed its full share of bad news regarding its business, rose upon the strongest sort of assurances regarding its future prospects. And Chicago and Great Western, which announced the passage of its dividend on preferred A, naturally rose. As the crop scare did not arrive, the grain carriers did as well as could be expected, improving moderately upon negatively good news, as the bulls would say, and not exhibiting aggressive support against anticipations of evil, according to the bears. With nine-tenths of the list higher, obviously the entire roll cannot be called, but it is pleasant to run the eye down the advances.

The bond market showed increased activity in the speculative issues recently favorites and well-distributed strength throughout the list. The produce and cotton markets were easier, and the money market showed no uneasiness at the prospects of a loss of bank reserve exceeding last week, and among the largest week's losses of cash known.

ROCK ISLAND IN ALTON SALE.

Hawley and Gates Acted for Moore Interests, It Is Announced.

Regarding the change of control of the Chicago and Alton, which is no longer to be considered as a Harriman road, it was authoritatively stated yesterday that the purchases on the part of Messrs. Hawley and Gates and some others were made on behalf of interests friendly to the Rock Island. It is understood that the new control now owns and has paid for over $4,500,000 of the preferred and $15,500,000 of the common. The stock was bought at an aggregate cost below $9,000,000. The capital has been provided so far by private individuals, and the transaction is so incomplete that speculation as to the future of the road is pure guessing.

Owing to the conditions under which Directors are elected, the new interests will have to wait two years before they will have a majority of the Board of Directors unless Harriman representatives resign.

Buffalo and Susquehanna Dividend.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Heavy Transactions Continue as Prices Advance—Reading Again the Leader.

Physicians tell us that when a man's stomach refuses to do its work properly it is not a bad scheme to put him on starvation rations until the overworked organ recovers sufficiently to take up its duties again. When Mr. Morgan came out with his now famous interview about undigested securities nearly two years ago the market closely resembled the case of a rebellious and dyspeptic stomach. For nearly a year it has been on starvation rations, but now it seems once more able to sit up and take food. Its digestion, indeed, seems to be of the very best kind, as it demonstrated yesterday when it swallowed 982,549 shares without gulping. Nevertheless, it may not be out of the way to suggest that gorging after a fast is not the best policy, and that a man's ability to eat pie once more without fear of a pain does not put him in the same class with a human ostrich. Cats and dogs are not the most wholesome food.

Red Letter Day in Reading.

There is a man down town who always speaks of Reading as "Red-ink." He would have been useful yesterday to help paint the calendar red, for, even though the officials in Philadelphia did not celebrate the dissolution of the voting trust, which occurred yesterday, Wall Street had to have its little celebration. Among the fireworks were 144,530 shares of the common sold at a net advance of 1 point, the stock touching 70 at one time. The talk was again centred in the retirement of the second preferred, with 5 per cent. dividends certain for the common, but the enthusiasts were not satisfied with that. "One hundred and fifty," said one man, emphasizing every syllable, which was the signal for reminiscences of the days when Lake Shore sold at 7, Jersey Central went begging at 15, while the man who did not sell Lackawanna short at 30 was thought to be robbing his family.

Rock Island and Alton.

The announcement that E. H. Harriman had lost control of the Alton, and that Rock Island interests were supposed to hold that property now, divided the Street into two camps. Some said that if Harriman had lost Alton he did it on purpose, like the tramp who drops an old loaf of bread behind the fence, hoping not to be found out until some one else has picked it up. The others said that this simply proved that it was no longer safe to follow the old scheme of relying on the proxies to control a road. "It will not do to leave out your chickens over night when there are colored folks around." But whatever the opinion, the result marketwise was to help along Rock Island, which was the second stock on the list in point of activity, 92,630 shares being dealt in.

United States Steel.

There were 79,440 shares of Steel preferred traded in, the stock advancing to 64⅝. The talk was that the net earnings for the September quarter would approximate $18,000,000, or about $3,000,000 more than had been expected. This would assure the payment of the dividend on the preferred.

That Metropolitan Circular.

There was a sudden though not unexpected advance in Metropolitan Street Railway. The management of the Metropolitan Securities Company has called in the stock held by the underwriting syndicate, and the news of this action was relied upon to scare the shorts to cover. For a while the desired result was obtained, and some stock was sold on the advance. But the flagrant manipulation of the stock and the continued cry of "wolf" are rapidly effecting an attitude of indifference among the speculative element which will not help any endeavor of insiders to sell out. It is safe to say Interborough reckons on taking over Metropolitan nearer par than now, if at all.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call loaned at ¾@1 per cent., closing at 1 per cent. Most of the day's loans were made at 1 per cent.

Time money rates, 2 per cent. for sixty days, 2½ per cent. for ninety days, 3 per cent. for four, and 3½ per cent. for five months.

Mercantile paper rates, 3½@4 per cent. for thirty to ninety days' indorsed bills receivable, 4@4½ per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 5 per cent. for others.

New York Clearing House exchanges were $215,624,540; balances, $6,824,697; Sub-Treasury creditor, $911,853.

Money on call in London, 1¼@1½ per cent; short bills, 2½ per cent.; three months' bills, 2 9-16@2⅝ per cent.

Foreign exchange was steady. Nominal rates were $4.85½ for sixty days and $4.88 for demand. Rates for actual business were as follows: Sixty days, $4.8450; demand, $4.87; cables, $4.8755.

Commercial bills were $4.83¾@$4.84⅞: Continental bills were quoted as follows: Francs, 5.19⅛@5.19⅛ and 5.17½; reichsmarks, 94⅞@94 15-16 and 95⅜; guilders, 40 1-16@40¼ and 40 5-16.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day in connection with the payment of £2,500,000 in Treasury bills. The supplies, however, were sufficient. Discounts were steady.

The rumor of the withdrawal of Russian gold from the Bank of France is not considered to be baseless, in spite of the denial that withdrawals are to be made. Financial circles are of the opinion that the amount will be much less than the sum named, £8,000,000 to £10,000,000. It is thought probable that the bulk of the money will be transferred to Germany in connection with payments necessary there, but possibly some of it will reach London. Consequently, there is much less anxiety as to the effect of the operation.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was quiet and prices were steady. The strong bank reserve helped to rally the market.

Consols were steady, but closed easier.

Americans opened fractionally higher and maintained their strength to above parity. Southern Pacific and Reading were the features. They closed firm. Grand Trunk hardened on traffic expectations.

Foreigns were fairly steady. Japanese securities were easier on the slowness of the progress of the Japanese armies. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 95⅞.

Closing prices:

Consols for money, 88 7-16; consols for account, 88 9-16; Anaconda, 4¼; Atchison, 84½; Atchison preferred, 101¼; Baltimore and Ohio, 91½; Canadian Pacific, 129; Chesapeake and Ohio, 43; Chicago Great Western, 17; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 161½; De Beers, 18⅝; Denver and Rio Grande, 27½; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 81½; Erie, 31⅝; Erie first preferred, 70; Erie second preferred, 47½; Illinois Central, 143; Louisville and Nashville, 126¼; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 24; New York Central, 127½; Norfolk and Western, 70⅝; Norfolk and Western preferred, 92; Ontario and Western, 34½; Pennsylvania, 65½; Rand Mines, 10½; Reading, 34⅝; Reading first preferred, 83⅞; Reading second preferred, 39½; Southern Railway, 31⅜; Southern Railway preferred, 98; Southern Pacific, 59⅛; Union Pacific, 102⅛; Union Pacific preferred, 96; United States Steel, 14⅛; United States Steel preferred, 64⅞; Wabash, 22; Wabash preferred, 42; Spanish 4s, 87¼.

Money, 1½@1¾ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2¼@2⅝ per cent.; three months' bills, 2 9-16@2⅝ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 37.67; Lisbon, 20.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—Business on the Bourse to-day was steady and the tone was calm. Russian Imperial 4s were quoted at 93.40 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 507.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f 70c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 23½c for checks.

BERLIN, Sept. 9.—The transactions on the Boerse to-day were unimportant.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 43 pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 2 per cent.; three months' bills, 2⅝ per cent.

Bank of Germany Statement.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

Discussing the conditions of trade, Dun's Review to-day says:

Holiday influence is calculated to check distribution of merchandise, but the past week has brought more encouraging results in the business world, and from many points comes reports of steadily expanding trade. While it is not exceptional to find comparisons with the corresponding week last year favorable to 1904. Retail trade in Fall lines of dry goods, clothing, millinery, and nearly all wearing apparel shows a healthy growth, and for hardware, household utensils, and kindred lines there is a broader demand. The best development of the week was the resumption of work in many industries that have suffered through strikes, while several serious controversies were averted. Crop progress is better than average, and high prices promise large profits to the farmers. Railway freight is heavy, chiefly due to the marketing of grain and cotton, and earnings in August were 2.8 per cent. larger than in 1903. Domestic trade holds up better than foreign commerce, which suffers from prices above the views of consumers abroad, yet the last week's returns for this port are encouraging, exports increasing $736,881 in comparison with the same week last year, while imports gained $2,578,343.

On the same subject, Bradstreet's says:

Detailed telegrams to Bradstreet's bring to light rather more interesting and encouraging features than have hitherto presented themselves this Autumn. There is more doing in jobbing dry goods at Chicago, and clothing, shoes, and leather have been moving more rapidly. Demand is, however, more in the shape of small lots, and buying from the corresponding section is especially conservative. More is doing also in lumber and hardware at all leading Western points. At St. Louis house trade is heavy, and business as a whole makes a fair comparison with a year ago. Jobbing trade has improved at Omaha, Indianapolis, Duluth, and Cincinnati. Business is fair at St. Paul and Minneapolis. At St. Joseph the season has started late, but business promises to be normal. On the Pacific Coast staple articles are in good demand, and collections have generally improved. High prices for wheat tend to stimulate country trade. At Eastern points improvement is less perceptible, but a fairly satisfactory jobbing business has been done at New York in dry goods; slight improvement is noted at Boston, and at Philadelphia the dry goods jobbing trade has opened well. There is a larger movement of shoes from Eastern points, more demand for leather, and some scarcity developing, owing to curtailment by tanners.

Textile manufacturers at Philadelphia report a fair demand for their product, but prices are rather unsatisfactory. Eastern print-cloth manufacturers are not pushing business at present prices. Some leading makes of ginghams have been reduced this week without much immediate effect on trade. The woolen goods trade is not as active as might be wished, but raw wool is firmly held, and confidence in the statistical position of that commodity is universal. Baltimore reports the rebuilding of the burned district actively proceeding, but lumber is weak owing to overstocking, and the oyster business is not yet in full swing owing to the warm weather.

Southern trade is expanding as the season advances. The movement of cotton is increasing, and the outlook for a large crop yield is still maintained. Memphis reports an increase in wholesale trade, New Orleans reports an excellent demand for staples from jobbers, Montgomery reports lumber more active, and home and foreign accounts, Jacksonville, that trade as a whole is larger than in former years, and Dallas, that general trade is active in spite of a move from an average crop of cotton. Atlanta, Knoxville, Augusta, Charleston, and Savannah report an improvement in the volume of trade over last year, with collections better.

MORE METROPOLITAN MYSTERY.

Recent Circular May Be Call on Stock—Officials Won't Talk.

Officers of the Metropolitan Securities Company would not talk yesterday regarding the alleged circular to syndicate members, about which the Street has heard so much during the last few days. The prevailing belief was that the circular might be a call for another installment of the amount due on Metropolitan Securities stock.

Another story had it that the circular called upon the former members of the Metropolitan Securities syndicate, which is said to have been dissolved, to deposit with Thomas F. Ryan the Metropolitan Securities stock which each member of the syndicate agreed at the dissolution of the syndicate to hold for a stated period. This stock is believed to amount to a considerable fraction of the entire stock of the company, and its deposit with Mr. Ryan will be under an arrangement by which he is given absolute freedom to make any deal or sale of it he pleases, without consultation with the others.

New Haven Mortgage Recorded.

To secure a $15,000,000 bond issue the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad has executed a mortgage to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. The mortgage is dated Sept. 1, 1904, and runs for 100 years. The bonds are to be issued at the rate of $1,000,000 a year, and are to be used for the purchase of the stock of the Boston and Providence Railroad, the Old Colony Railroad, the Boston and Maine Railroad, and the Connecticut River Railroad.

GENERAL BUSINESS ITEMS.

Chattanooga, Tenn., dispatches state that the Dupont Powder Company of Wilmington, Del., has acquired the property of the Chattanooga Powder Company, whose mills at Coltewah are the largest of their kind in the South.

According to Chicago dispatches, the National banks of that city, in their report of Sept. 6, will show the largest deposits on record.

Articles of incorporation have been filed in Illinois for the Hillsboro & Southwestern Railway Company to construct a steam road from Hillsboro to Alton.

The Nickerson File Company of Providence, R. I., has increased its capital stock from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000.

Imports of dry goods at the Port of New York for the week decreased $437,575 as compared with the previous week, but increased $148,755 as compared with the

AMERICAN LOCOMOTIVE REPORT

Substantial Increase in Net Earnings Shown in Annual Statement.

The annual report of the American Locomotive Company is made public to-day. The summary of earnings shows slight decreases in gross earnings, but the decreases in operating expenses are so large as to prevent the showing of an increase in net results. The statement shows:

	1903-4.	1902-3.
Gross earnings	$33,068,750.56	$33,105,724.58
Manufacturing, maintenance, and administrative expenses	27,404,965.40	28,052,814.98
Net earnings	5,663,785.16	5,053,409.60
Interest on bonds of constituent companies, bills payable, &c.	238,226.07	248,156.70
Profit available for dividend	5,425,559.09	4,805,253.30
Dividend on preferred stock at 7 per cent.	1,750,000.00	1,750,000.00
Surplus	3,675,559.09	3,055,253.30
Extraordinary improvement and betterment fund	1,000,000.00	.....
Balance to profit and loss	2,675,559.09	3,055,253.30

Speaking of the trend toward electric motive power the report says:

During the past year the mechanical and electrical engineers of this company have been in frequent consultation, not only as to the general problem of the possible future application of electric power to steam surface railroads, but also in regard to a specific proposition for an electric locomotive suitable for use in the suburban traffic of one of the great trunk lines. After much study and in co-operation with the General Electric Company, agreements have been entered into for the manufacture of thirty electric locomotives to be delivered by 1906. The American Locomotive Company will construct the mechanical part of the locomotive, the General Electric Company supplying all the electrical apparatus.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 9.—Money in Boston is quiet, with a little more ease. Call loans 2@2½ per cent.; time loans on collateral, 4@5 per cent.; time loans on mercantile paper, 4@5 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds, 10c discount; clearings, $18,568,063; balances, $1,533,197; Sub-Treasury debit, $111,883.

	Sight.	60 Days.
Cables	$4.88
Sterling	4.87½	$4.85
Commercial		4.84
France	5.15⅝	5.19¼
Reichsmarks	.95⅝	.95⅞
Guilders	.40¼	.40⅝

The stock market was rather quiet to-day, and some of the coppers were inclined to heaviness. Anaconda, however, was strong. The feature of the market was the weakness of the Massachusetts Electrics. The preferred dropped to 58 and the common to 11¾. The cause of the latest break is the belief that the dividend on the preferred stock will not be paid. Complete transactions were as follows:

CURRENCY MOVEMENT.

Discussing the movement of the currency The Wall Street Journal this morning says:

The reported movements of currency this week indicate a loss of $8,659,200 in cash held by the banks.

They received from the interior $2,706,600, and sent to the interior $1,794,800, of which there was transferred through the Sub-Treasury $300,000 to New Orleans, $250,000 to Chicago, and $200,000 to Cincinnati. The loss to the interior was $5,088,200.

Receipts of new gold were $1,459,300, namely: $718,200 on New York Assay Office checks, $384,000 on San Francisco Mint checks and telegraphic transfers, and $356,500 on Seattle Assay Office checks for Klondike gold.

Gold exports were $500,000 in coin to Argentina. Ordinary disbursements by the Sub-Treasury were $13,907,700; payments by banks to the Sub-Treasury for customs, internal revenue, 5 per cent. redemption fund, retirement of circulation, &c., were $14,438,000. The loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper was $4,530,300.

The total loss, to the interior, $5,088,200, by gold exports $500,000, to the Sub-Treasury $4,530,300, was $10,118,500; deducting the gain of $1,459,300 new gold, the net loss was $8,659,200.

The net loss to the interior in the largest on record at this time of the year, but was exceeded in October, 1901 and 1903, and in November, 1903. The greater part of the money went South, although about $2,000,000 went to Boston, where exchange on New York has been at 10 cents to 20 cents discount all the week, indicating drawing upon New York deposits to meet the demand of country correspondents.

The large loss on Sub-Treasury operations represents chiefly payments of internal revenue collections at the West by the New York correspondents of Western depositary banks. Such payments enable the money to be used where collected, and are as much a part of the crop movement as if the cash had been sent by express. Deposits for the retirement of circulation were about $200,000. The payments on account of the 5 per cent. redemption fund were also large.

Customs collections were $3,075,800, a daily average of $615,100 for the five business days, comparing with $3,359,700, and a daily average of $559,900 for the preceding week. Pension payments were $837,000, comparing with $678,000 in the preceding week.

The Sub-Treasury received from banks and sent to Washington for redemption $3,821,000 mutilated currency.

GENERAL BUSINESS ITEMS.

Chattanooga, Tenn., dispatches state that the Dupont Powder Company of Wilmington, Del., has acquired the property of the Chattanooga Powder Company, whose mills at Coltewah are the largest of their kind in the South.

According to Chicago dispatches, the National banks of that city, in their report of Sept. 6, will show the largest deposits on record.

Articles of incorporation have been filed in Illinois for the Hillsboro & Southwestern Railway Company to construct a steam road from Hillsboro to Alton.

The Nickerson File Company of Providence, R. I., has increased its capital stock from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000.

Imports of dry goods at the Port of New York for the week decreased $437,575 as compared with the previous week, but increased $148,755 as compared with the

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Irregularity marked the trading in unlisted securities yesterday and smaller totals were shown. There were several sharp breaks and a number of issues showed net declines for the session. Southern Pacific preferred stock, first installment paid, was transferred to the Exchange, and in all only 500 shares of the "when issued" sold at 113⅝. Consolidated Refrigerating advanced to a new high record on the purchase of 2,000 shares. The stock opened at 6 and closed at the top, 6½. British Columbia touched 4½ on what appeared to be excellent buying. Northern Securities displayed considerable activity, but after reaching 104⅜ sold off and closed at the bottom. Macka y Companies common continued strong on few transactions.

***

WHITE KNOB COPPER attracted considerable attention owing to its sharp break of 1⅜ to the low record for the year. No explanation of the drop could be obtained, and apparently there was no special significance to it, as the stock has been steadily declining.

***

ELECTRIC VEHICLE common was the feature of the trading due to a spectacular jump of 4½ points to 17. Various rumors of the rise were in circulation, one of which was that there was an attempt to run shorts to cover. The preferred sold up to 21. As there are about 24 per cent. back dividends on the preferred stock the fact that the common could within 4 per cent. of the preferred caused considerable discussion.

***

SAFETY CAR HEATING AND LIGHTING Directors have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent., payable Oct. 1. The extra dividend of 1 per cent. which has been paid for a number of quarters was not declared. Books close Sept. 15 and reopen Oct. 3.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—New York exchange was 25 cents discount. Time and call loans, 4½@5 per cent.

Trading on the local Exchange today again ran somewhat to taking profits. This was most apparent in Box Board preferred, which has been manipulated of late by a pool. Sales of some 300 shares during the morning took prices down to 10½. Can preferred also was sold rather freely, 500 shares going during the morning at 47 and lower. In Swift's shares there was a momentary improvement of small proportions following the strike settlement. Biscuit shares were steady. City Railway went again at 190, West Chicago at 56.

Treasury Department Rescinds Order on Pickled Sheepskins.

Decides That They Are Entitled to Free Entry—New Instructions on Bean Cake Classification.

The leather trade won a victory yesterday when the Treasury Department announced that it had revoked its instructions to Collectors of Customs to assess duty at the rate of 20 per cent., as non-enumerated manufactured articles, on pickled sheepskins. These skins will continue to come in free of duty as raw skins as they have been doing since 1899, when the Board of United States General Appraisers, after one of the most exhaustive hearings in its history, decided that the pickling was not a process of manufacture, but only useful to preserve the skins during the voyage.

A few weeks ago the Collector at Philadelphia reopened the question by classifying them as non-enumerated manufactured articles, and the department was at first disposed to support him. Such a storm of protest arose from the trade, however, that it decided to recede from that position.

The department also issued a letter to Collectors yesterday instructing them to classify bean cake, made of beans, which had been cooked and then sugared, as confectionery. The attention of the department was drawn to the fact that at San Francisco this product was being classified as confectionery, at Seattle as sweetmeat, and at New York as vegetable.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Duty Fixed on Woven Flax Fabrics—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Marion de Vries, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a series of protests by Campbell, Metzger & Jacobson of New York against the assessment at various rates, including 1⅜, 2⅜, 6 and 9 cents a square yard and 30 per cent. ad valorem, but in no case less than 50 per cent., of certain flax articles and woven fabrics of flax. It was claimed that they were dutiable at 35 per cent. This claim was sustained only as to certain woven fabrics weighing less than 4½ ounces to the square yard and counting more than 100 threads to the square inch.

Protests overruled yesterday were by Hensel, Brueckman & Lorbacher of New York, F. F. Downing & Co. of Philadelphia, and Otis McAllister & Co. of San Francisco. A protest by H. Fevne of Los Angeles was sustained.

INSURANCE CONCERN FINED.

Royal Exchange Co. Accused of Violating Massachusetts Laws.

BOSTON, Sept. 9.—A fine of $15,000 has been imposed on the Royal Exchange Insurance Company of London, transacting business in this Commonwealth, for violating the State laws. A fine of $200 also has been levied on Herbert G. Fairfield, the Massachussetts agent of the company. The company's license to do business in Massachussetts was revoked several weeks ago on account of the alleged violations.

The fines were imposed at the instance of the State Insurance Commissioners, who found that the company had been insuring Massachusetts properties in companies not authorized to do business in the State and that it had been insuring properties on policy forms not sanctioned by Massachusetts laws.

ROTHSCHILD MADE TROUBLE.

Discounted Company's Notes Deposited in Trust—Reorganization Planned.

A petition asking that the National Lock and Metal Company be declared an involuntary bankrupt was filed yesterday by Hays & Hershfield, attorneys for creditors. The concern is a corporation which was organized by David Rothschild, former President of the Federal Bank.

Rothschild, as President of the Federal Bank, made a contract to loan the National Lock and Metal Company $25,000. About $5,000 of this amount was advanced; the Federal Bank and Rothschild thereafter became insolvent, and no further advances were made. The receiver of the bank made a demand for the return of the $5,000 advanced under the contract. In addition to this $25,000 of notes deposited in trust representing prospective profits, and which were not to be used unless such profits accrued, were discounted and put in circulation by Rothschild. The company gave a chattel mortgage, which was construed as an act of bankruptcy by the petitioning creditors. The receiver took charge of stock, tools, and machinery amounting nominally to $35,000; the liabilities are $22,000.

Hays & Hershfield said that the company would be completely reorganized.

Salt War Drives Price Down Again.

A further reduction in the price of salt in the war between the International Salt Company and the independent producers was announced yesterday. Salt is now being offered at $1.75 a ton. The cost of a ton of salt laid down in New York is $2.40.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

ABRAHAM GOLDIN.—Deputy Sheriff Altman has received an execution against Abraham Goldin, manufacturer of packing boxes at 34 Bayard Street for $642 in favor of Max Sass on four notes, and closed up the place. He has been in business several years in a small way.

JOHN N. FORBES.—John N. Forbes, wholesale dealer in paper and manufacturer of paper folding boxes and waxed butter dishes, at 585 Hudson Street, made an assignment yesterday to Henry W. Stokes. Mr. Forbes has been in business since May, 1898. In January last he bought a factory at Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., and in April moved the machinery to this city, and removed his business from 455 West Fourteenth Street to 585 Hudson Street. His creditors yesterday appointed a committee to examine into his affairs and report a basis of settlement. His liabilities are reported to be $20,000 and assets $8,000.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

MORRIS COHEN.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Stephen P. Nash receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of Morris Cohen, cloak manufacturer at 165 Greene Street, with a bond of $1,500.

LEVI & KLAUBER.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Arthur Patterson receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of Levi & Klauber, wholesale dealers in dress goods at 27 Lispenard Street, and fixed his bond at $1,000.

BERNARD S. HATTON.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Thomas G. Barry receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of Bernard S. Hatton, dealer in men's furnishing goods at 2,149 Broadway, and fixed his bond at $3,000.

ANDERS PUSH BUTTON TELEPHONE COMPANY.—At a meeting of creditors of the Anders Push Button Telephone Company of 136 Liberty Street, held yesterday at the office of Peter B. Olney, Referee in Bankruptcy, John Brooks Leavitt was elected trustee, and six claims, aggregating $6,300, were proved.

C. D. SMITH & CO.—A meeting of the creditors of C. D. Smith & Co., stockbrokers of 25 Broad Street, was filed yesterday at the office of Peter B. Olney, Referee in Bankruptcy at 68 William Street. Twenty-five claims, aggregating $18,721, were proved and James B. Kelsheimer was elected trustee.

PARIS MILLINERY SUPPLY.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Jacob Jacobson, manufacturer of women's trimmed hats, under the style of the Paris Millinery Supply, at 61 Bond Street, show liabilities of $17,862 and assets of $8,068, consisting of stock and fixtures, $2,000, and accounts, $1,068. Among the creditors are M. Isaacs, $3,005; Steinfelder & Topiltz Co., $791; J. Abrahams & Co., $789, and Max Feist, $673.

Attachment Against London Firm.

Deputy Sheriff Rinn has received an attachment for $34,880 against Wernher, Beit & Co., bankers of London, in favor of William G. and M. R. McAdoo. It was granted by Judge Keogh of the Supreme Court in Westchester on the ground of non-residence. The claim is for alleged breach of contract for the payment by the London firm for 471 shares of stock of the Mexican Traction Company. It was served on a lawyer here, who is said to hold $25,000 belonging to the firm.

Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 144 failures in the United States during the week, against 136 for the previous week and 165, 197, 182, and 167 for the corresponding weeks of 1903, 1902, 1901, and 1900. The Middle States had 57, New England 14, Southern 19, Western 28, Northwestern 11, Pacific 13, and Territories and Canada had 14, against 17 for the preceding week. About 84 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less and 11 per cent. had from $5,000 to $20,000 capital.

Judgments.

The following judgments were filed yesterday, the first name being that of the debtor:

ACKERLE, J. P.—S. O. Church & Brothers.
BRASH, Herman—E. J. Thomas.
BERGIN, Catherine—E. J. Mulligan and another.
BLISS, Albert E.—S. Carter.
BURRELL, Cornelius V. B.—Brooks Brothers.
CACASHTA, Mary—H. Finkelstein.

COTTON MARKET TAME.

Prices Sag for Average Loss of Twelve Points—Receipts Heavy.

The cotton market yesterday was a tame affair. Transactions were barely enough to keep half the brokers busy. Prices sagged slowly all day, finally showing an average loss of 12 points. Receipts continued heavy and reports from certain parts of the cotton belt continued bullish, but the market paid little attention to either, being dominated entirely by technical conditions. It is not considered unlikely that it will go below 10 cents before the end of this month and it would not be at all surprising if afterward it should advance to 13 cents. In the mean time ventures on either side are likely to be whipsawed.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE Southern District of New York.—HYMAN BALENZWEIG, bankrupt.

Notice is hereby given that Hyman Balenzweig, bankrupt, has filed his petition, dated August 8th, 1904, praying for a discharge from all his debts in bankruptcy, and that all creditors and other persons are ordered to attend at the hearing upon said petition before United States District Judges in the United States Court House and Post Office Building, in the City and County of New York, on Wednesday, September 28th, 1904, at 10:30 A. M., and then and there show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted, and also attend the examination of the bankrupt thereon. MACCRANE COXE, Referee in Bankruptcy. New York, September 9th, 1904.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the Southern District of New York.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of JONAS J. COLE, Bankrupt.—No. 7,359.

To the creditors of Jonas J. Cole of the City, County, and State of New York and district aforesaid, bankrupt:

Notice is hereby given that on the 25th day of August, A. D. 1904, the said Jonas J. Cole was duly adjudicated bankrupt; and that the first meeting of creditors will be held at my office, No. 71 Broadway, City and County of New York, N. Y., on the 26th day of September, A. D. 1904, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon, at which time the said creditors may attend, prove their claims, appoint a Trustee, examine the bankrupt, and transact such other business as may properly come before said meeting. STANLEY W. DEXTER, Referee in Bankruptcy. Dated New York, Sept. 9th, 1904.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHern District of New York.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of RUPERT FRITZ, Bankrupt.—No. 4,735.

To the creditors of the above-named bankrupt:

Notice is hereby given that Albert Falck, attorney for creditors herein, has filed with me his petition, verified September 6, 1904, from which it is made to appear that a vacancy exists in the office of the Trustee herein; and notice is hereby further given, pursuant to General Order XXV. in Bankruptcy, that a special meeting of the creditors of said bankrupt is hereby called, to take place at the office of the referee, John J. Townsend, 45 Cedar Street, New York City, on the 21st day of September, 1904, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of electing a new Trustee and transacting such other business as may properly come before said meeting. If the creditors do not appoint a Trustee an appointment will be made by the court. JOHN J. TOWNSEND, Referee in Bankruptcy, 45 Cedar Street. New York City. New York, September 6, 1904.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHern District of New York.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of JOHN F. JACKSON, Bankrupt.—No. 4,431.

Notice is hereby given that Leroy Clark, as Executor, &c., a creditor herein, has filed with me his petition, verified August 29, 1904, showing among other things that certain real property in which the bankrupt has an interest has been discovered which has not been administered by the Trustee in Bankruptcy heretofore appointed herein, and showing that the said Trustee has been discharged of his trust; and on said petition an order has been made by me reopening the above-entitled estate; and notice is hereby further given that pursuant to General Order XXV. in Bankruptcy, a special meeting of creditors of the above-named bankrupt will be held at the office of John J. Townsend, Referee in Bankruptcy, 45 Cedar Street, New York City, on the 21st day of September, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon, at which meeting the said creditors may attend, appoint a Trustee, examine the bankrupt, and transact such other business as may properly come before said meeting.

If the creditors do not elect a Trustee at appointment will be made by the court. JOHN J. TOWNSEND, Referee in Bankruptcy. Dated New York, September 8, 1904.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the 29th day of August, 1904, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, No. 161 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 23d day of September, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by L. J. Phillips & Co., auctioneers, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:
All that lot of land, with the buildings and improvements thereon, described as follows: All those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, and being on the northerly side of Forty-eighth Street, between the Sixth and Seventh Avenues, in the Twenty-second Ward of the City of New York, Borough of Manhattan, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the northerly line of Forty-eighth Street, distant four hundred (400) feet westerly from the northwest corner of Forty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue; running thence northwardly parallel to Sixth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches; thence westwardly parallel to Forty-eighth Street, eighty (80) feet; thence southwardly and parallel to Sixth Avenue one hundred (100) feet ten (10) inches to the northerly line of side of Forty-eighth Street, and thence eastwardly along the said northerly line of Forty-eighth Street eighty (80) feet to the point or place of beginning, be said several dimensions and distances more or less.
Dated New York, September 1st, 1904.
PETER A. HENDRICK, Referee.
EVERETT B. HEYMANN, Attorney for Plaintiff, 35 Nassau Street, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.

The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above-described property is to be sold is $40,091.33, with interest thereon from the 22d day of August, 1904, together with costs and allowance amounting to $311.07, with interest thereon from the 29th day of August, 1904, together with the expenses of sale; the approximate amount of water rates is $28, with interest, such amount to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the referee.
The premises will be sold subject to a first mortgage for $100,000, with the interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from January 1st, 1904, accrued and to accrue up to the time of the delivery of the referee's deed, and to any foreclosure thereof that may be instituted, with the costs; subject also to the restrictive covenants contained in the instrument recorded in Liber 906, Conveyances, Page 273, in the office of the Register of the County of New York affecting the westerly five feet only of the mortgaged premises, and subject also to an encroachment by the easterly wall of the building on the premises adjoining on the west to the extent of about three inches on the mortgaged premises and an encroachment by the southerly wall of the building and shed on the premises adjoining on the north to the extent of about ten inches on the mortgaged premises; to variations between the location of the retaining and yard walls and the record lines, and to the projection over the mortgaged premises of the window sills of the building on premises adjoining on the north; all as shown by survey made by George C. Holferth, dated January 23d, 1896.
PETER A. HENDRICK, Referee.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW YORK.—JOHN H. BOHLING, plaintiff, against LOUIS WEINECKE and others, defendants.
In pursuance of an interlocutory judgment of partition and sale, duly made and entered in the above-entitled action, and bearing date the 22d day of July, 1904, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the Exchange Salesroom, No. 161 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 28th day of September, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Philip A. Smyth, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:
All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, with the buildings and improvements thereon, situate, lying, and being in the Borough of the Bronx, in the City, County, and State of New York, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the corner formed by the intersection of the westerly side of College Avenue with the southerly side of East 148th Street, and running thence southerly along the westerly side of said College Avenue, fifty (50) feet; thence westerly and parallel with said East 148th Street, seventy-five (75) feet; thence northerly and parallel with said College Avenue, fifty (50) feet to the southerly side of said East 148th Street, and thence easterly along the southerly side of said East 148th Street, seventy-five (75) feet to the corner aforesaid, the point or place of beginning.
Dated New York, the 6th day of September, 1904. CHARLES F. BLISS, Referee.
THEODORE H. FRIEND, Attorney for Plaintiff, No. 123 Nassau Street, Borough of Manhattan, New York City.
WILLIAM H. KLINKER, Guardian ad litem of the defendant Louis Weineke, No. 48 Nassau St., Borough of Manhattan, New York City.
JOHN B. QUINTIN, Attorney for defendant, Bertha Bohling, No. 244 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, New York City.

BEST'S NEW TRAFFIC PLAN.

Commissioner Suggests Cross-Town Elevated or Subway to Relieve Congestion.

Bridge Commissioner Best sent another letter to Mayor McClellan yesterday on the question of improved facilities for handling traffic over the old and new East River Bridges, having been moved to do so by the fact that provision has not yet been made for a redistribution of the masses of people entering and leaving Manhattan by these avenues of travel.

Mr. Best says that the proposed connecting railway between the two bridges now erected would afford but little relief. He says that to avoid the experience of having a bridge completed with no railway facilities, as is the case with the Williamsburg Bridge, lines to and from the Manhattan bridge should be provided for now. He therefore suggests to the Mayor the following improvements:

An elevated railway through Canal Street from Greenwich Street or the Hudson River to the Manhattan Bridge terminal, with a branch through Elm Street, Centre Street, or the Bowery to Delancey Strteet, thence to the terminus of the Williamsburg Bridge, the line to be built either by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company or the Manhattan Elevated.

Or, a trolley subway through Delancey Street, across town to Hudson Street, down Hudson Street, West Broadway and Greenwich Street, at least as far as the Jersey City ferries at Cortlandt and Liberty Streets, with a branch through Duane Street, under the present subway at Elm Street, into the basement of the projected station on Centre Street, there to connect with the trolley lines from Brooklyn, which could use the basement of the station as a terminal and through station.

The building of this line the Commissioner suggests leaving to the Brooklyn Company or to the Jersey City Railway Companies, which will soon have a foothold in New York through tunnel. He thinks that this route could be operated as a loop or otherwise at the option of the companies. The transfer of the present loop tracks at the Brooklyn Bridge to the basement of the new terminal station Mr. Best believes to be advisable, but not imperative. He adds: "I assume that the project to carry the South Brooklyn Subway over the Manhattan Bridge may be urged quite persistently, and that if it is adopted we shall not be able to run so many cars over this bridge as has been anticipated. In this event, a trolley subway would not be necessary."

UPHOLDS UNWILLING WITNESS.

Law Requiring Him to Go to Another State Invalid, Justice Says.

Justice Blanchard, in the Supreme Court, decided yesterday that Section 618A of the Penal Code, passed last Winter, requiring material witnesses in criminal proceedings in adjoining States which have adopted reciprocatory measures, to obey subpoenas under pain of contempt, to be unconstitutional.

The case, the first under the law, was that of H. Delinsky of 141 Bowery, who is wanted by the Pennsylvania authorities at Allentown, to testify against Isaac Berman, charged with forging Delinsky's name to notes aggregating $500, and whom Delinsky does not desire to prosecute.

EMPLOYERS' THREAT TO END BUILDING TIE-UP

May Start Work Immediately Unless Unions Surrender.

CARPENTERS' PROJECT FAILS

Ask Proposition, Then Make One, Which Is Promptly Rejected—Tile Workers' Monopoly Totters.

The indications of yesterday were that building will be resumed in this city by the Building Trades Employers' Association in a few days, either in accordance with the plan of President Nason of the Building Trades Alliance if the unions come to terms, or by virtue of stringent measures on the part of the employers.

A committee of the Brotherhood of Carpenters which had decided to try Nason's plan had a conference yesterday afternoon with a committee of the Master Carpenters' Association at the Building Trades Club, but it was barren of results. The committee of carpenters had as spokesman Chairman Manning of the New York District Council of the Brotherhood of Carpenters. At first the carpenters' committee said that it had come without any proposition to make or power to act, and wanted to get a proposition from the employers.

On behalf of the employers it was said that over 700 carpenters had been engaged under the arbitration agreement, 75 per cent. of whom were members of the Brotherhood, and that the Master Carpenters' Association would go on hiring more men, who would be formed into unions. It was also said that the employers would insist as a preliminary to any settlement that the new men be taken into the Brotherhood under the regular rules without being fined or otherwise disciplined.

The Labor Committee then suddenly remembered that it had a proposition to make. This was in effect that all strikes and lock-outs be declared off; that all new men, union or non-union, who were employed be discharged, and that then negotiations for a new trade agreement be set on foot. The employers flatly refused to settle except on their own terms and the Labor Committee withdrew.

Lewis Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the Employers' Association, said later that four employing carpenters' associations in the Building Trades Employers' Association had held a meeting and decided to form two unions of carpenters under the arbitration plan. One of these is to be composed of house carpenters and the other of cabinetmakers. Unless the locked-out carpenters experience a change of heart soon, he said, these will be the only unions of carpenters the Employers' Association will recognize. Then he added:

"We have at last succeeded in breaking the monopoly of the Tile Layers' Union, which for many years absolutely controlled the trade, and have succeeded in employing seventy-six competent tile layers. We have also opened a school of instruction for tile layers, and have given the union until to-morrow to come to terms, failing in which it will never be recognized."

Mr. Harding explained that in the past every one who wanted to become a tile layer had first to become a helper, and then to graduate as a tile layer. The initiation fee for the Tile Layers' Union is $100, and the initiation fee for the Tile Layers' Helpers' Union is $150. A helper, even when he can lay tile, can only be allowed to do so at the will of the union. There are men in the helpers' organization who are sixty years of age, and have been from twenty to twenty-five years able to lay tile as well as any member of the Tile Layers' Union, but they have not had the chance. The iron-clad rules of the Tile Layers' Union keep the books closed against them.

The Employing Grate, Tile, and Mantel Association hopes to recruit the ranks of a new union of tile layers by employing competent men of the Helpers' Union, who up to now have not been allowed the chance of working at the calling they chose.

"As to the marble workers," Mr. Harding said, "the marble industry had an important conference with the Marble Industry Employers' Association yesterday, and the marble workers were told exactly what the situation was. None of the marble workers are locked out, but the marble cutters are on strike. They were told that the strike must be declared off and that they must agree to work with any men we may employ under the arbitration agreement as a condition of settlement. The conference was friendly, and another will be held on Monday, at which I believe a settlement will be reached. In the meantime the marble workers are expected to do missionary work among the other unions."

President Mason of the Building Trades Alliance, who is a member of the Marble Cutters' Union, said yesterday that the strike in his trade will soon be settled.

THREAT IN NOTE TO HARDING.

Employers' Association Official Warned to "Take a Back Seat."

The Building Trades Club was thrown into a state of mild consternation yesterday by the contents of a letter received by Lewis J. Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee, in the afternoon. The letter was postmarked Station D and was received at one minute past 1 o'clock, which was regarded as suspicious. It was in a square instead of a business envelope, and was addressed in a handwriting evidently disguised, to "Lewis Harding, Press Committee, Building Trades Employers' Association."

The letter itself was in the same disguised hand, and was written on a scrap of paper without date or signature. It read:

Years of crookedness noted. Take back seat at once or end with a bullet.

A consultation was held, and one or two contractors suggested that Mr. Harding at once get a permit to carry a revolver, but he laughed at the suggestion. It was suggested that the letter be sent to Inspector McCluskey, and ask him to find out the writer, but Mr. Harding wouldn't have it. After it had been read several times and scrutinized upside down and sideways it was decided to do nothing, and the letter was placed on file.

BROOKLYN'S AWFUL MONSTER.

Turned Out to be a Baby Alligator—Made Woman Faint.

A baby alligator on a tour of exploration caused a lot of excitement in the neighborhood of Harrison and Glinton Streets, Brooklyn, yesterday. Miss Bertha Abrahamson of 238 Harrison Street discovered it asleep in the areaway of her home, and the sight gave her such a fright she fainted. When her mother had revived her by applications of cold water she told of having seen a "strange and ugly reptile." The news spread that a terrible monster was loose in the neighborhood, and folks rushed from all directions to get a look at the queer visitor.

The alligator, which measured about eighteen inches in length, blinked its eyes at the crowd, but made no attempt to eat any one. Roundsman Howe of the Amity Street Station poked the alligator into a bag with his club and took it to the station house.

Vreeland, Cannon Witness, Drops Dead.

Addison G. Vreeland, fifty-five years old, of 52 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, the principal witness against Charles K. Cannon, recently convicted of a felony in New Jersey, dropped dead in his office at Hoboken yesterday morning from heart disease. Mr. Vreeland was Vice President of the Mountain Ice Company and lodged the first complaint against Cannon, whose office windows were directly opposite his own.

WOMAN SEEKS INJUNCTION.

Brinckerhoff Loaned Her Money and Wants to Foreclose.

Mrs. Elsie C. Oviatt of Bay Seventeenth Street, Bath Beach, through William R. Wilder, applied to Justice Blanchard in the Supreme Court yesterday for an injunction restraining Daniel D. Brinckerhoff of 204 West One Hundred and Sixth Street, from foreclosing a mortgage on the Bay Seventeenth Street property which she occupies.

Mr. Wilder said that Brinckerhoff, who is an elderly man, became acquainted with Mrs. Oviatt about the time she had trouble with her husband, and advanced her about $15,000. Brinckerhoff brought an action to recover the money. According to the lawyer a settlement was then effected, Mrs. Oviatt giving a bond and mortgage for $5,000 on the property, it being understood that she was to pay interest to Brinckerhoff as long as he lived and upon his death was to become owner of the bond and mortgage.

Mr. West, of counsel for Brinckerhoff, said that the woman's friends had arranged a meeting between Mrs. Oviatt and his client at the house of a relative, and that later Mrs. Oviatt called at Brinckerhoff's office, and, telling him her matrimonial troubles, obtained sums amounting to about $15,000, and later demanded $5,000 more, giving a mortgage for the latter amount. Justice Blanchard reserved decision.

SUPT. MAXWELL'S DENIAL.

Didn't Estimate Part-Time Pupils at 125,000—No Way of Telling.

Dr. William H. Maxwell, City Superintendent of Schools, denied yesterday that he had said that 125,000 children would be on part-time instruction on Monday next. In his statement he said:

I have made a most careful study of the statistics on the question in past years and am convinced that there is no reliable factor for determining with any great degree of accuracy the number who will or will not be on part time. If the population did not shift it might be possible to arrive at fairly accurate results, but with new points of congestion springing up as a result of immense migration of peoples from one borough or neighborhood to another it is impossible by subtraction of the number of new sittings to be opened from the prospective attendance to ascertain the number of pupils on part time.

There are a number of vacant sittings in the system. These vacant seats are in outlying boroughs or else are in grammar grades, whereas sittings are needed in congested districts and in primary rooms. By rigid consolidation of small grammar grades whole rooms have been opened to primary children, and this policy will be continued next year. The deficiency of sittings is far less than the number on part time. A single sitting will put two children who are on part time instruction into a full day class. I do not feel that the known elements of the operation of population in school matters give me scientific data sufficient to warrant a statement that will be pessimistic or one that would hold out special hope to the people. There is a glimmer of comfort in the fact that the early registration in one of the most congested districts indicates a betterment of conditions.

The Superintendent said that the only approximation he had made was in reference to the total register. He said that no child of six years or over would be refused admission. He thought the first day's registration would be about 579,854.

McADOO TWISTS THE SCREW.

Spurs His Police Up—Has Suggestion for Magistrate Pool.

Answering newspaper criticism, Police Commissioner McAdoo said yesterday that the police were not asleep by any means, and that they could not anticipate murders. He added, however, that he was "putting the screws on the department just now."

In the afternoon the Commissioner had all the Inspectors in Manhattan closeted with him for more than an hour. When they came out of the room it was intimated that they had listened to a good talk and instructed that the "lid" should be kept down tight.

The Commissioner later offered an amendment to Magistrate Pool's suggestion that "drunks" be carried home from court in automobiles. "Why not put a feather bed in the automobile for them to lie off and give them a headache powder when they wake up next morning," he said.

BOY FOUND DEAD ON CAR ROOF.

Young Jacobson Killed While Stealing Ride on Central Train.

Car cleaners working on the New York Central's Limited train shortly after it reached the Grand Central Station from Chicago at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, discovered the dead body of Abraham Jacobson, seventeen years old, lying on the roof of a mail car near the locomotive. The head was crushed, and one arm clasped about a ventilator held the body. The boy is supposed to have been stealing a ride and to have raised his head as the flier shot under a bridge or into a tunnel.

Identification was made by a letter of recommendation from Dr. Paul Hanke, a dentist of 19 Lexington Avenue, for whom the boy formerly worked, and later confirmed by his father, Joseph Jacobson, a merchant at 419 Broadway. The family lives at 32 West One Hundred and Twelfth Street.

The lad left home about a week ago to look for work, and his relatives had heard nothing from him.

NAVY OFFICERS DISPUTE.

Trouble at Navy Yard Over Invitations to Launching.

Another contention has arisen among the officers at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in connection with the privileges of guests at the launching of the battleship Connecticut. The Executive Committee on Aug. 25 decided that officers attached to the New York station and the battleship Kentucky would be allowed invitation cards as follows: Six to each commissioned officer, three to each commissioned warrant officer, six to each Midshipman, and two to each warrant officer.

The so-called "commissioned warrant officers" took exception to the distinction made both as to the number of tickets and the designation. Under the personnel law of 1899, Section 12 provided "that boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers shall after ten years from date of warrant be commissioned chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers, to rank with but after ensigns." Those who felt offended sent a protest to the commandant, who returned it with the indorsement that the action of the Executive Committee could not be interfered with. The Secretary of the Navy was next appealed to. Some of the warrant officers have even refused to ask for tickets.

JUSTICE MINUS THE SCALES.

Soldering Wore Away and They Fell from City Hall Statue.

The heroic statue of Justice which caps the dome of the City Hall is minus its scales. An excited individual rushed up to Janitor Martin Keese yesterday and asked him why the scales of Justice had been removed. The janitor did not know, but he went up on the roof and found that the scales had fallen ignominiously from the hand of the figure to the roof below. Further investigation showed that the soldering which held them had worn away.

The figure of Justice is about eight feet in height, and the scales are a little over two feet in length. The statue was placed in position about fifteen years ago, and this is the first accident that has befallen it.

No Arrest, No Accident at Glen Island.

The season at Glen Island will close with the departure of the last boat on Monday evening. The early termination this year is due to extensive alterations to be made on the work on which will begin on Tuesday morning. The statistics show that up to Friday night 1,120,067 persons had visited the place. Despite this large number no one accident was reported and not one arrest was made by the police.

CONSOLIDATED TOBACCO PLAN IS NOW COMPLETE

Directors Vote Merger with American and Continental Companies.

TO RETIRE COMMON STOCK

Holdings of Consolidated Wiped Out, but Earnings Will Be Distributed About as at Present.

As the consummation of the plan initiated when the Consolidated Tobacco Company came into existence three years ago for the purpose of acquiring the Continental and American Tobacco Companies, and did so acquire virtually all the common stock of both the other corporations, the Directors of the American Tobacco, the Continental Tobacco, and the Consolidated Tobacco agreed yesterday upon the actual consolidation of the three companies into one company, to be called the American Tobacco Company. A stockholders' meeting to ratify this action—purely a formal affair—will be held on Sept. 30.

A unique feature of the merger, said the Directors in the official circular, will be the reduction of capitalization by about $111,000,000. It appears, however, that this reduction of capital is a nominal one, inasmuch as the principal items of capital which are canceled consist in the amounts of American and Continental Tobacco common which the Consolidated acquired in 1901 in exchange for its present 4 per cent. bonds, and the Continental preferred, now held in the treasury of the American. Under the merger plan, therefore, the existing Consolidated common stock, which has enjoyed in the past the lion's share of the earnings of the two constituent companies, is to be exchanged for new common stock at par, and it will, therefore, enjoy a like share of the earnings of the new corporation, profiting by whatever reduction of fixed charges is achieved by the general scheme of exchange.

The merger plan, as announced by W. W. Fuller, general counsel of the companies, states that it is believed that the merger will work "to the increased security and simplification of the whole investment and business. "At present there is outstanding $14,000,000 of 8 per cent. non-cumulative preferred stock of the American Tobacco Company, $48,844,000 of 7 per cent. non-cumulative preferred stock of the Continental, of which $16,767,100 is held by the American and Consolidated; $157,378,200 4 per cent. 50-year gold bonds of the Consolidated, $40,000,000 of Consolidated common stock, $54,500,000 of American common stock, all of which, except $225,450, is held by the Consolidated, and $48,846,100 of Contigental common stock, all of which, except $17,000, is held by the Consolidated, complete the capitalization of the allied corporations. The American and Continental companies have no bonded debt.

The basis of exchange proposed by the plan for the several securities is stated as follows:

That the preferred stocks of the American and Continental be converted into 6 per cent. forty-year gold bonds at the rate of $116-⅔ of bonds for each share of Continental preferred stock and $133-⅓ of bonds for each share of American preferred stock, the $16,767,100 Continental preferred held by the American and Consolidated Companies to be canceled, so that the bond issue will amount to $56,090,416, a decrease in the face value of these first securities of $6,754,135, and a decrease in annual interest charge, as compared with the present dividend charge, of $1,173,697.50.

That the $40,000,000 stock of the Consolidated Tobacco Company and the $242,450 American common stock and Continental common stock not held by the Consolidated Tobacco Company be converted into the [illegible] stock of the new company at par.

That the [illegible] of the Consolidated Tobacco [illegible] such bonds for 6 per cent. cumulative new preferred stock at par, leaving the balance of the 4 per cent. bond issue subject to the prior lien and charge of the 6 per cent. bonds. Holders of one-half of the 4 per cent. bonds having agreed to the exchange, bondholders who have not signed the agreement having an option of taking their holdings either in the bonds or partly in bonds and partly but not to exceed 50 per cent. in 6 per cent. preferred stock.

The plan will make the outstanding securities of the new company, in the order of their priority, as follows:

6 per cent. gold bonds	$56,090,416
4 per cent. gold bonds	78,688,100
6 per cent. preferred stock	78,688,100
Common stock	40,242,450

Provision is made for additional common stock to be issued or not issued hereafter as the Directors see fit. The plan provides further that the new company shall pay to a Trustee $500,000 annually for the purchase for retirement of the 6 per cent. bonds at a price not to exceed 120, with a proviso that in case the 6 per cent. bonds cannot be purchased at that price, the money shall be returned to the company. The covenant is to continue until all of the 6 per cent. bonds shall have matured or have been retired.

The earnings of the three companies in 1903 were $22,228,182.09, of which the Continental earned nearly $13,000,000 and the American more than $8,000,000. The Consolidated, however, declared no dividend that year. The official statement of the merger plan estimates the application of earnings as given to the 6 per cent. bonds, the 4 per cent. bonds, the 6 per cent. preferred stock, and the common stock, as follows:

Amount required to pay interest on $56,090,416 of 6 per cent. bonds	3,365,424.96
Amount required to pay interest on $78,688,100 of 4 per cent. bonds	3,147,564.00
Amount required to pay dividends on $78,688,100 of 6 per cent. preferred stock	4,721,346.00
Amount (in excess of all interest charges and preferred dividends) applicable to dividend on 40,242,450 common stock	10,993,847.13

This balance would allow for a 25 per cent. dividend on the new common stock of the American Tobacco, which in the merger represents the present stock of the Consolidated Tobacco Company. It compares with a surplus of $10,017,324 in the Consolidated for 1903, after payment of all charges, out of which no dividend was declared, and a surplus of $6,915,216 in 1902, out of which a dividend of 20 per cent. was paid on the $30,000,000 Consolidated stock issued up to that time.

NEW KINK IN LAMAR TANGLE.

Sheriff Ordered Not to Deliver Deeds for Seabright Property.

Judge Holt, in the United States District Court, here, yesterday added a new complication to the legal troubles of David Lamar. He appointed George C. Comstock receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of Bernard Smith of 225 West Fifty-seventh Street, Lamar's brother-in-law, and granted an order temporarily restraining the Sheriff from giving to anybody a deed of the so-called Lamar property at Seabright, N. J., whose ownership is in dispute.

The receiver was appointed on the application of Epstein Brothers, attorneys for Monroe L. Simon, who filed a petition in bankruptcy against Smith on Thursday.

A. G. Spalding bought the property at a recent Sheriff's sale for $76,700. Epstein Brothers say that it is worth at least $100,000. The time for Lamar to give a bond of $75,000 in an action to prevent the Sheriff from handing over the deeds to Mr. Spalding expires at noon to-day.

YOUR appearance can be made a business asset.

Nothing contributes more to wholesome appearance than good clothing—not necessarily expensive—but apparel that is tasteful, becoming and well-fitting.

We have it.

Models in sacks, single and double-breasted, were never more distinctive and pleasing for general wear, while English walking suits lend dignity and elegance to more formal business dress.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

HENRY JAMES'S new novel, "The Golden Bowl," will be published before the distinguished novelist's long-deferred visit to his native land is finished. The publishers boldly announce that it is a work of "unaffected simplicity and naturalness." They bespeak for it a wide popularity. Simplicity, either of theme or of treatment, has not characterized Mr. James's later books, but we fancy that both "The Wings of the Dove" and "The Ambassadors" have had more readers than some of the most highly esteemed books of their author's middle period, "The Tragic Muse," for instance, and "The Princess Casamassima." Certainly they have been much discussed. James as a "literary topic" seems to us more in evidence now than he has been since the era of "Daisy Miller" and "An International Episode." Undoubtedly a new work from him, avoiding his recent manner of indirection and persistent symbolism, would be widely read. "The Golden Bowl," we are told, has strongly dramatic passages and has appreciable pathos. The scene is European, as usual, while the principal personages are Americans.

Thomas Hobbes, author of "The Leviathan," whose life by the late Sir Leslie Stephen in the English Men of Letters Series is ably reviewed by Mr. Chadwick, was one of the remarkable men of all time. He wrote for publication in his ninety-first year, the year of his death. He translated the Odyssey in his ninth decade. Yet he was known as a philosopher and writer more than half a century before. Sir Leslie Stephen says of him that he "produced a fermentation in English thought not surpassed until the advent of Darwinism." His name was long a term of reproach among the bigoted and unlearned. He was the butt of comedians and jesters. But his fame outlived the jests. The list of his published works is prodigiously large. He was always at work, and his life was long spared. As Mr. Chadwick points out, he lived in four reigns and under the Protectorate. He was the contemporary of Shakespeare, Milton, and Dryden.

The late Laurence Hutton's reminiscences "The Literary Life," which begin in the September Critic, the man and his straightforward, simple view of life. They are an amplification of a lecture he once delivered to the students of Princeton. The facts of his life are set forth in an absolutely ingenuous and unaffected way, (such facts as he thinks worth recording at all,) and his literary impressions and prejudices are stated simply and clearly. A large part of the first installment is taken up by Mr. Hutton's memories of Charles Dickens's readings in this country in the late sixties. Mr. Hutton was not the only one who confessed at that time a great disappointment in the manner of the reader and his platform interpretation of familiar and cherished passages in his novels. But he was one of the first frankly to print his confession, for his record of his impressions of Dickens as a reader was contributed to The Red Hook Journal in 1868, and was his first published article. One of the new books of the Autumn, by the way, will be Mr. Hutton's "Literary Landmarks of Scottish Universities."

McClure's Magazine for October will open with Lincoln Steffens's spirited account of the political rows in Wisconsin and the development of "La Follettelism." Its last article will be a fresh chapter in Ida M. Tarbell's account of the operations of the Standard Oil Company. Midway between the two will be an article by Carl Schurz on the late George William Curtis, "Friend of the Republic." This is the address delivered by Mr. Schurz at the unveiling of the bust of Curtis in the Lenox Library. It is a gracious and eloquent tribute to one of the clearest-minded, highest-principled, and most patriotic citizens this Republic ever produced. The editor of McClure's will introduce it with a note touching Mr. Steffens's articles on "Enemies of the Republic"—"men who, if unchecked, will ruin the fairest experiment yet made in democratic institutions." In "sharp contrast to these sordid histories," the editor will present this sketch of one "who cultivated the highest ideal of republican government."

Thus far the promise of the Autumn, in the book world, is not rich in comparison with last year and the two previous years. Presumably many books will be withheld from publication until after the political turmoil has subsided. But the early Fall announcements are gratifying as to quality. In the field of biography, autobiography, and reminiscence, where we look nowadays for the most interesting books of the Fall season, we are to have a fresh volume from Justin McCarthy, the "Life and Letters" of the late Bishop of London, Dr. Mandell Creighton, by his wife, (Louise von Glehn Creighton,) who has written various historical works; Moncure D. Conway's reminiscences, and Mrs. Roger A. Pryor's. Of all such books, however, Admiral Schley's "Forty-five Years Under the Flag" is most eagerly awaited by American readers. Later in the season we are to have the Recollections of Edward Marston, the veteran London publisher; "The Memoirs of John Wilson Murray," a famous international detective; "The Recollections of Sarah Bernhardt," and a new biography of Walter Pater.

We have already printed some account of the Pepysian Library and its naval manuscripts, a review of the "Descriptive Catalogue" of which we publish to-day, by arrangement with The London Times. Samuel Pepys is best known as the author of the most entertaining diary ever written, one that reveals frankly to the ages his most intimate personal characteristics, and has enriched literature with such a picture of London life in the diarist's time as would not otherwise have been obtainable. Samuel Pepys was also a man of affairs, an executive officer of uncommon ability, a man of some learning and large ambition. He contemplated writing a History of the British Navy, which, however, was never begun. But he had collected materials for it which during the nineteenth century [illegible]

THOMAS HOBBES.

The Late Sir Leslie Stephen's Book About the Early English Philosopher Who Wrote "The Leviathan."*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW by

JOHN WHITE CHADWICK.

THIS posthumous publication is the second to make its appearance since the author's death. As compared with his Oxford lectures upon Literature and Life in the Eighteenth Century, it is a far less attractive book. Its note is that of his "English Utilitarians" rather than that of his delightful literary essays. Even as compared with that it has more of the dryness of the chapter upon James Mill than of the pleasantness of that upon John Stuart Mill, Hobbes's mind and character having had much less in common with the younger Mill than with the elder, and furnishing much less in the way of humorous suggestion than Bentham did in the course of the same ethical study. Of what it does furnish Sir Leslie has gratefully availed himself, and he finds his opportunity where it would be lost upon a duller wit.

The "Hobbes" is Sir Leslie's fifth volume in the "English Men of Letters," the others, "Swift," "Jonson," "Pope," and "George Eliot," and it will at once appear that in Hobbes he has no such subject of general interest as in the earlier books. What he has is an occasion offered by none of them for his philosophical and critical acumen, and those who value him pre-eminently or much for this side of his mind will not be disappointed in this final exhibition of its peculiar power. The book must have been written under circumstances of great physical weakness and depression, but there is no sign of failing intellectual energy at any point.

Whatever Hobbes's lack of personal interest, his long life was contemporaneous with a great and stirring time, with events of high significance, with men of exalted genius and the highest rank. Born in 1588 and dying in 1679, his ninety-one years coincided with fifteen of Elizabeth's "spacious times," the reigns of the first James and Charles, the Commonwealth, and nineteen years of Charles the Second. Rumor has it that his birth was hastened by his mother's fear that Malmesbury would be the natural "objective" of the Spanish Armada. More interesting than the political contemporaneity is the literary. All of Shakespeare's work was done in Hobbes's lifetime, Milton's life was lived out from beginning to end, of Bacon's nearly the last forty years, and of Ben Jonson's rather more. Across the Channel that great light, Descartes, was hanging in the sky; at home Locke and Dryden were entering on their inheritance of great renown. Some of these names are much more suggestive than others. Shakespeare's and Milton's suggest the defects inherent in the method of M. Taine. How derive the genius from the time when the same time produces such radically different growths as Hobbes and Shakespeare? Hobbes knew and admired Jonson; submitted to him his translation of Thucydides. If Shakespeare meant anything to him we have here no sign of it. There is not a single mention of his name.

In the philosophical order Hobbes was the great name between Bacon and Locke. It was Sir Leslie's intention to add something to his book connecting Hobbes with Locke and others who were his philosophical inheritors, or, at least, successors. We can hardly forgive his editor for withholding the notes which were intrusted to his care. However rough, they would have filled a noticeable void. With Bacon Hobbes had personal acquaintance. Indeed, it is to Hobbes that we owe the story that Bacon's death was caused by an experiment in cold storage—stuffing a fowl with snow.

Taking "his delicious walks at Gorhambury" Bacon found Hobbes more astute than any one else in catching his meaning and giving it intelligible expression. But Sir Leslie finds quite as much of contrast as of resemblance in the working of these master minds. They were agreed in rejecting the old scholasticism. They were heralds of the scientific dawn. But whereas Bacon's great aim was to extend the physical sciences by experimental methods, Hobbes had "nothing but scorn for experiment in physics," his own method being quite the opposite of the Baconian induction.

Sir Leslie's matter is divided into four chapters, the first of which deals with Hobbes's life, the [illegible] with his views of the World, Man, and the [illegible]

Franklin's visits to Germany, which also added materially in creating public sympathy for the colonists. There is little to be said in regard to this journey, and not much especially in regard to the visit to Göttingen, where, but Mr. Rosengarten gives a careful collation of what mention of it is to be discovered. He was honored at various places as a scientist, and his pleas on behalf of the American colonies received an attentive hearing. Göttingen was the most notable incident of his journey. There is a chapter on German and American universities, in which it is recorded that the first American student at a German University was Benjamin Smith Barton of Lancaster, 1786, who was followed by Franklin's visit, 1766, his degree in medicine, and returned to become Professor in the University of Pennsylvania.

Moral Philosophy.

"The Elements of Moral Philosophy," by Prof. Mohit Chandra Sen of Bipon College, has been revised in its second edition and published in America with the imprint of E. P. Dutton & Co. The book was originally designed to meet the wants of students preparing for the B.A. examination by the Calcutta University, and does not deviate much from the type of Muirhead and Mackenzie with which the author expresses regret that for want of space he had to abstain from referring largely to Indian ethical systems, the book has been revised in its second edition and sending a unified view of various contemporary ethical theories, and a criticism in the light of Hegelian and Spencerian principles. MARYLAND.

Prof. James's New Edition of McSherry's History of That State From Its Earliest Settlement.*

MR. BARTLETT B. JAMES, who edits and writes a continuation to James McSherry's "History of Maryland," informs readers in the preface that he has corrected what appeared to be "a certain fulsomeness" in the eulogies in the work (McSherry's) and has made "literary changes . . . up to the chapter which relates to the close of the Revolutionary War, though he has largely amplified it."

It is the original Catholicism of Maryland which renders the study of that State of marked interest. The discovery of the Chesapeake Bay was probably due to Gov. Lane of the first colony of Virginia in 1585. There is fair evidence that eighteen years later Capt. Bartholomew Gilbert entered and explored the Chesapeake. More years elapsed before plans of colonization were attempted. In 1606 the London and Plymouth colony was formed, and certain grants of land, which included what is known to-day as Maryland, were allotted to it. The same year the London Company had a fleet of three vessels, with 140 colonists, assembled at Blackwall, on the Thames. Capt. Christopher Newport was in command, and the expedition sailed on Dec. 19, 1606. Driven by a storm, he seems to have found shelter in the Chesapeake. In May, 1607, he made the exploration of the James River, and laid the foundation of Jamestown.

The Virginia Company now held control, and in 1609 it asked for more extended privileges. These were not granted, and "thus the extensive territory, heretofore granted to the late London Company, reverted to the Crown, and became the subject of grants for the erection of a new province." Now enters that remarkable man, Sir George Calvert. In 1609 he had an interest in the London or Virginia Company.

Calvert was born in 1582, when Elizabeth was Queen. Educated at Oxford, he held some minor position under Sir Robert Cecil, then Secretary of State. He was knighted in 1617, and two years afterward was appointed one of the Secretaries of State. He became prominent in protecting the rights of King James. Sir George Calvert was by birth a Protestant. Later he became a Catholic, and, moved "by conscientious scruples," he resigned his official position, giving James his reasons. "The King was moved by his honest avowal, and, while he accepted the resignation, continued him as a member of his Privy Council for life, and soon after created him Lord Baltimore, of Baltimore in Ireland."

Precisely the same reasons which induced the leaders of the Puritans to find a refuge in New England caused Calvert to seek security for Catholics in the new country. At first he thought that in Newfoundland he would found a settlement, and thither he went. The rigors of the climate disappointed him, however, and he determined to seek a more genial country. He sailed to Virginia in 1628. Upon his arrival, as he was required to conform to certain rules of allegiance and supremacy not in conformity with his ideas of religious liberty, he explored the waters of Chesapeake Bay, and beyond what he thought was the jurisdiction of the Virginia Colony he found a well-wooded country. When he returned to England, King James had been succeeded by Charles I. Calvert asked for a new patent, but before it was executed he died. The King's patent was given to his son Cecilius, who followed at once in the footsteps of his father. The charter granted on the 20th of June, 1632, called the new province Terra Mariae—Maryland—in honor of Queen Henrietta Maria. Lord Baltimore was designated as Lord Proprietary.

The ecclesiastical laws of England with regard to churches and chapels, in so far as they related to the matters of consecration and presentation, were extended to the Colony, but the question of State religion was left untouched and therefore within the legislative power of the colonists themselves. The King reserved to himself one-fifth of the gold and silver which might be found in the province and the yearly tribute of two Indian arrows.

Lord Baltimore fitted two vessels, the Ark and the Dove, which set sail with 200 emigrants, "all of whom were Catholics and gentlemen of fortune and respectability, who desired, like himself and as had his father, to flee from the spirit of intolerance which pervaded England, and to rear their altars of freedom in the wilderness." With the colonists were two Jesuit priests. The entire command was under the charge of Leonard Calvert, whom his brother (who remained in England) had appointed Governor of Maryland. After escaping many dangers the party finally made a landing on what is now thought to be Blackstone's Island. This island was deemed too small for a city. In March the vessels entered the mouth of St. Mary's River. On March 27, 1634, a site was selected and purchased from the Indians. Later more land was purchased and this was called "Augusta Carolina." Here was founded the City of St. Mary's.

Soon began a period of trouble. As Maryland was within the limits of the royal Government of Virginia, there were interferences in trade. Capt. William Claiborne established a post upon Kent Island with the authority of the Governor of Virginia. There was bad feeling between the authorities of Virginia and Lord Baltimore. The general opinion is that Claiborne instigated the Indians to acts of hostility. Foiled in a first attempt, Claiborne in 1635 fitted out a small craft "to cruise against the colonists." The participants in the raid were captured. Then came further complications, with renewed trouble with the Indians. It is possible that there were malcontents within the Colony. There is much confusion concerning the first years of the Colony. Religious antipathies were rife, and, as happens to-day, the facts were distorted.

With the death of Charles and the increase of Puritanical power, Lord Baltimore was wise enough to change the policy of his Colony. In 1648 he appointed William Stone Governor of the province, and 500 settlers, probably Protestants, were transported to Maryland. In 1649 the General Assembly met at St. Mary's.

After enacting severe punishment for the crime of blasphemy and declaring that certain penalties should be inflicted upon any one who should call another a sectarian name of reproach, it proceeds with this * * * declaration: "And whereas the enforcing of conscience, in matters of religion, hath frequently fallen out to be of dangerous consequence in those Commonwealths where it has been practiced, and for the more quiet and peaceable government of the province, and the better to preserve mutual love and unity amongst the inhabitants, &c., no person or persons, within this province or the islands, ports, harbors, creeks, or havens thereunto belonging, professing to believe in Jesus Christ, shall from henceforth be anyways troubled or molested, or discountenanced for or in respect of his or her religion, nor in the free exercise thereof, within this province or the islands thereunto belonging, nor in any way compelled to the belief or exercise of any other religion, against his or her consent."

Peace was not assured. With the advent of Cromwell there were still many ardent royalists in Maryland. An effort was made to prohibit Catholics or royalists from holding office. Gov. Stone seems to have been ill suited to face the emergencies. In 1655 there was armed resistance. The Puritanical party was victorious, and then the property of those who had taken up arms was confiscated. Finally the controversy was referred to "Commissioners of Trade" in England. That body directed "that the act for freedom of conscience should be duly observed in Maryland." Philip Calvert was appointed Secretary of the province in 1657.

Now came about a divided rule. The Puritans "governed at the North, at Providence," afterward known as Annapolis, while the friends of the Lord Proprietary still held St. Mary's. The history of this period is not clear. There was more agitation during the reign of Charles II. Effort after effort was certainly made to diminish Catholic influences. The Established Church was intolerant. Under James II., who began his unhappy reign in 1685, conditions did not improve, "and thus in a colony which was established by Catholics and grew up into power and happiness under the Government of a Catholic, the Catholic was the victim of intolerance."

To us this early history of Maryland is of great interest. Just prior to the Revolution the Stamp act met with marked resistance. When the Colonial Congress met in New York, (October, 1765,) Maryland was fully represented. In 1774 the power of the Lord Proprietary "was verging to its fall, and the province was governed by a sovereign convention of the people." Of course there were anomalies in the religious liberty of the time, for the Jew did not enjoy the privilege of the franchise. The author writes:

Although Maryland was the original home of religious liberty in America, yet until the year 1826 no Jew was allowed to hold any office, civil or military, under the State Government. The history of the agitation for the enfranchisement of the Jews is an interesting record of the struggle for a right which to-day is so manifest that it is difficult to appreciate the grounds for its denial at the time. In fact, the basis of such denial was prejudice. * * * Finally, at the end of the session of 1824, a bill to alter the Constitution so as to afford relief to persons from political disqualification on account of their religious opinions again passed the Assembly. The bill was ratified by the Assembly of 1825, and by it the Jews attained the status of free men in Maryland.

Up to the time of the civil war the condition of the slave was the same in Maryland as in the other Southern States. The first slaves imported into Maryland came from Bermuda, (1634.) The importation of the slave was encouraged, but there was too large an influx of the negro, and in 1695 a per capita tax was imposed on all slaves brought into the province. By the treaty of Utrecht "Spain guaranteed to England the monopoly of supplying negro slaves from the Spanish-American provinces." Prior to the Revolution the negro population of Maryland was 20 per cent. that of the white. As far back as 1780 there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment in Maryland.

Arch Bridges.

"Types and Details of Bridge Construction" is the title under which Frank M. Skinner has collected contributions to The Engineering Record and other periodicals and lectures to his class in field engineering at Cornell University. Mr. Skinner is an editor of the paper mentioned, a consulting engineer, and a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. His book is intended as an epitome of practice in America and as a concise summary sufficient for ordinary purposes of record and reference and for practical use for design, study, and comparison by the engineer, architect, contractor, draughtsman, designer, instructor, student, and municipal official.

This volume is restricted to the discussion of arches designed to carry pedestrian, highway, or railroad traffic; it is confined absolutely to facts about work which has actually been built. The data have been prepared from official drawings, photographs, and specifications; personal study and notes, and from unpublished material loaned by his friends and colleagues. The engineers in charge of the construction of the bridges described. Among the bridges described are the New River Gorge Bridge and the Washington Bridge; this latter and the Alexander III. Bridge across the Seine have a chapter to themselves. The Alexandre III. [illegible] for its beauty of ornamentation. Its concrete and masonry abutment piers were built on the largest steel pneumatic caissons ever made, 110 by 144 feet; under full live load the skewback pressures are 2,004,000 pounds for each pedestal. There are innumerable drawings and photographs, and constant references to page and date of periodicals and transactions of societies for more extended treatment; also a classified index. THE THEORY OF BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

By THORSTEIN B. VEBLEN, Ph. D., Assistant Professor of Political Economy in the University of Chicago. Cr. 8vo, $1.50 net (postage 14 cents).

An inquiry into the nature, causes and economic value of business enterprise, marked by a wide knowledge and observation and a clear, attractive style. The author's point of view is that given by the business man's work—the aims, motives, and means that condition current business traffic. His chapter headings show the scope of the inquiry: Introductory—The Machine Process—Business Enterprise—Business Principles—The Use of Loan Credit—Business Capital—The Theory of Modern Welfare—Business Principles in Law and Politics—The Cultural Incidence of the Machine Process—The Natural Decay of Business Enterprise.

THE GOSPEL AND THE CHURCH

By ABBÉ ALFRED LOISY. 12mo, $1.00 net.

This work, which created a sensation throughout the Catholic world when it first appeared in France, is a positive statement of Christian doctrine by one of the most able and accomplished leaders in the movement for greater freedom of thought and action in the French Catholic Church. "It has in an eminent degree," says the QUARTERLY REVIEW, "what Newman's famous 'Essay on Development' had not, the judicial temper. Free from sophistry and special pleading, the Catholicism that inspires it is hereditary and religious, not political." It is a very valuable contribution to the religious thought of the time, and incidentally will give students the point of view of the progressive party in the Roman Catholic Church.

THE ETHICAL TEACHING OF JESUS

By CHARLES A. BRIGGS, D. D. $1.50 net (postage 13 cents).

There are two introductory chapters treating of the Sources and the Form and Method of the Teaching of Jesus; then the Teaching itself as to the Will of God, the Words of Jesus, the Law, Righteousness, the Kingdom of God, the Two Ways, Repentance and Faith, Sin and Judgment. There is a careful discussion of Casuistry and Pharisaism. The great principle of love is unfolded in Chapters on Godlike Love, Christlike Love, Following Christ and the Councils of Perfection. The whole concludes with Jesus's Teaching as to the Church and Society. The book, while complete and thorough in its investigation, avoids technicalities, and its simple and natural style makes it appropriate for popular reading.

The President

A NOVEL

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

Author of "The Boss"

Illustrated by JAY HAMBRIDGE. Price $1.50

A story full of dramatic incidents, absorbing in its interest, extraordinary in its inner glimpses of the great game of national politics. "The President" is first of all a novel, picturing striking phases of life in Washington, Wall Street and elsewhere, revealing intrigues, and full of dramatic happenings. A most interesting love story runs throughout. "The President" is more thoroughly a novel than "The Boss" in the development of love interest and intrigue. But the author has drawn upon his extraordinary knowledge of the inside of political life, and he tells a remarkable story. "The President" is a book that will be heard from everywhere.

THE

BY

ROSE CECIL O'NEILL

A new book of rare conception by a new author who has heretofore been known by her remarkable style of illustration. Her reputation as author is likely to become equally unique. Rose Cecil O'Neill's characters are as real as those of Dickens and as funny, while in her power of depicting the humor and the pathos of childhood she is without a peer. Aside from the story, the sixty or more beautiful illustrations make the book a choice possession.

JAPAN.

Some Curiosities of Alfred Stead's New Departure, "Japan by the Japanese."*

By Arrangement with The London Times.

THERE are thousands of books on Japan; it was at one time the fashion for every chance visitor to write a book. Some few are excellent; the majority are inaccurate and misleading." We take these words from the preface of "Japan by the Japanese," a very substantial volume of almost one thousand pages—written by the men who are now guiding Japan's destinies" and edited by Mr. Alfred Stead. Mr. Stead, knowing that authoritative writing was wanted to dispel the ignorance which exists in the outside world concerning Japan and, though he must have heard such names as Satow, Chamberlain, Aston, and Brinkley, that it was "impossible for any foreigner to supply it," conceived the idea of specially going to Japan and "suggesting to several of the leading men that they should undertake the production of an authoritative account of their own country for the information of the outside world. The idea was taken up with enthusiasm," and the present work is the result. In the interval that has taken place between the inception and fruition of Mr. Stead's idea Capt. Brinkley's profound work has appeared. Its cost, however, places it beyond the means of most book buyers, and only devoted students are likely to face seriously the task of mastering the contents of its eight substantial volumes. With Mr. Stead's criticisms of the majority of the books written on Japan we cordially agree; and as Capt. Brinkley's work must, for the reasons we have given, remain unavailable to ordinary readers, the field is still open for a comprehensive and accurate book of reasonable size and reasonable price. Such a work should receive a warm welcome from the British public.

The present work fails to fulfill the want that exists, and we have completed its perusal with a strong feeling of disappointment. Even to the very best English authorities on Japan there are many esoteric details of the daily lives of the people, from that of the Court downward, which are still involved in mystery, on which we expected some light should be thrown in a work written by the Japanese for the avowed purpose of making themselves known to foreigners as they really are. But there is scarcely a word on this subject throughout the whole of the present work. There can be no better authority on the Court than Baron Sannomiya. He has contributed to this volume a chapter which is entitled "The Imperial Family." It is no exaggeration to say that there is not a sentence on the imperial family in it. It does not contain one fact which we did not know before, and it does not in one detail penetrate the curtain which hides the daily life of the Emperor as effectually as those of his forefathers were hidden in the days of their seclusion at Kioto. Social reformers, such as Profs. Nitobe and Hozumi, have contributed chapters on "The Moral Ideas of Japan" and on "Ancestor Worship," the foundation of the whole indigenous system of religion, both full of interest. But Prof. Nitobe deals with the moral ideas of the Samurai only, and, though no similar limitation applies to Prof. Hozumi, neither learned author vouchsafes one word on the subject on which above all others we desire enlightenment—a remark which may also be applied to Baron Suyematsu in his chapter on "Women's Education."

It is impossible for us with the space at our disposal to refer, even in the most general terms, to the vast number of subjects of which it treats. Mr. Stead has certainly been successful in inducing the foremost men in every line in life at least to give their names to it. In some instances, however, their contributions are old public speeches or political manifestoes without interest at the present day. There are long chapters, crammed with statistics, on national debt, banking, industries, the postal system, railways, and general education, principally prepared in the several Government departments whose function it is to deal with the respective subjects, in a few instances by individual authorities; but they often consist of verbatim excerpts from the published Blue Books of Japan. At the same time, a book which brings into compact form so much information, even if none of it is new, should, if it is reliable, be a valuable work of reference and find a place in every public library and on the book shelves of every one who takes more than a passing interest in Japan, and had Mr. Stead bestowed on the editing of his material even a moiety of the painstaking industry which he has evidently devoted to its collection, no disappointment at the absence of information which the book does not contain would have prevented us appreciating that which it does and extending a very cordial welcome to it. We are sorry that both appreciation and welcome are equally out of our power.

It is scarcely too strong an epithet to apply to the editing to say that it is deplorable. When a volume is the work of many persons, writing without communication with each other, it is only natural that the results should in some instances cover the same ground. But it is the duty of a careful editor to eliminate tedious repetitions, and these tedious repetitions occur in the present book in number sufficient to try the patience of the most indulgent reader. The headings of some of the chapters are inapplicable to the contents. The economic statistics are throughout entirely out of date. In only two instances are they brought down to the year 1906. The majority do not extend beyond 1901, and some not beyond 1899. We have already abundant statistics at our disposal till the close of 1903, and as those for the year 1902 were available twelve months ago, there can be no excuse for the belated tables which Mr. Stead has given in such number.

Apart from these general deficiencies the book bristles with editorial blunders. They are too numerous to be detailed in full, but, as an example, we shall quote some in the second chapter, which consists only of thirteen out of the 700 pages composing this whole book:

Page 19.—"24 year of Kao." The proper word is Kei-o—quite a different sound. "24 year of Bundi"—should be Bunji.

Page 21.—"Taira No Kujomori was appointed Minister President (Dajo-Daijio)"—Kiyomori, the chief of the great Taira clan, for twenty-five years autocrat of all Japan, is one of the most celebrated personages in Japanese history. He has been designated by Satow as the Warwick of Japan. His office of Minister President was not Dajo-Daijio, which is unintelligible, but Dajo-Daijin.

Page 22.—"The office of Seji-Daishogun." The proper title is Sei-i Taishogun, which is older in Japanese history than that of the Prince of Wales in English.

Page 23.—"The battle of Ishigahara." The battle of Ishigahara is one of the greatest events in Japanese history, its name being as familiar to the Japanese as Waterloo to the English.

Page 24.—"The eighth Shogun Yoshimime" should be Yoshimune, one of the three greatest of the Tokugawa Shoguns. "3d and 4th year of Bunk." Bunk is impossible as a Japanese word. The proper term is Bunkwa. "All the principal Daimyos, Tokugawa of Nito, Shimazu of Satsuma, Nabeshima of Higm," &c. Nito should be Mito and Shimazu Shimazu, both terms being correctly given a few lines further on, "Higm" is on a par with "Bunk." The proper word is Hisen.

Page 25.—"In 1853 (6th year of Koye) Commodore Perry arrived off the harbor of Inaza." Koye should be Ka-ei, and Inaza Uraga, the latter a well-known harbor at the entrance to the Gulf of Tokio, the Gravesend of Japan. The only place the name of which in any way resembles Inaza is the old Russian settlement of Inasa, in Nagasaki Harbor, which Perry never visited.

Page 27.—"Fi Naosuke, one of the Princes in the Shogun's Government." There is no such sound as Fi in the Japanese language. Ii-Naosuke, better known by his title, Ii, Kamon No Kami, was as prominent a figure in Japanese politics in the early days of foreign intercourse as the Marquis Ito is at the present day. "Such Daimyos as Shimazu Satsuma, Mori Choshiu, Yamanuchi, [should be Yanis No Uchi, as correctly given on the next page] Tosa." We might as well say in English, such peers as Stanley Derby, Cecil Salisbury, Howard Norfolk.

Page 29.—"The fifteen Shogun, Yuiki." "Yuiki" should, as correctly given lower down in the same page, be Keiki. Iyemochi and Keiki were the two last of the Tokugawa Shoguns, under whom intercourse began with the West. The latter is still living, and the names of both are familiar to all persons possessing even the most rudimentary acquaintance with modern Japanese history. Mr. Stead may have imagined there were two Shoguns, one called Yuiki and the other Keiki. In the next page the latter is mentioned as "the Keiki," as though Keiki was a title. "Date and Ihimazu of Satsuma." Daté, a nobleman who played a large part in the revolution and was Minister for Foreign Affairs after the restoration, was Lord of Uwajima, and had no connection with Satsuma. The nobleman previously mentioned as Shimazu and (correctly) as Shimazu here appears under the new and almost unrecognizable guise of Ihimazu.

This list, long though it is, does not exhaust the errors contained in the short second chapter alone. They are samples of others throughout the book. Even the index is not free from them.

Sir Harry Parkes, the greatest of all Englishmen who have served their country in the Far East, is referred to as "Consul in Japan." An attack on him in Korea is also mentioned, (Page 657.) No attack was ever made on Sir Harry Parkes, nor, so far as we can recollect, on any British subject in Korea; but on turning to the indexed page in the volume we find that the so-called attack in Korea was the historical assault made by fanatics on Sir Harry Parkes's escort in Kioto when on his way to his first formal audience with the retired Emperor. It is an original piece of information (found on page 128, and referred to in the index as "Malacca, Japanese warships supplied by") that the Japanese corvette Tsukuba, one of the best known training ships in the Japanese Navy, was built at Malacca, where nothing was ever built larger than a Malay proa. She was originally the English corvette Malacca, well known in the Crimean war, and subsequently sold out of the navy.

Mr. Stead professes to be quite outside the category of superficial writers, and, notwithstanding the modest declamation in his preface, to be an authority on Japan. His mistakes, which we have quoted, cannot be ascribed entirely to carelessness. They were at once apparent to us on a very casual perusal of the chapter containing them, and they must have been equally so to him in the careful perusal which, we presume, he gave to it when revising the proofs, if he possesses the most rudimentary knowledge of the history, geography, or language of Japan or of the persons who have played a great part in its modern development. If he possesses none of this knowledge, and discharged his editorial duties in the darkness of ignorance, he could have verified all the quotations we have made by reference to the well-known and easily accessible works of Chamberlain or Griffis, we might venture to say even to Murray's handbook. The confidence placed in him by the leading men of Japan which received its crown in the gracious permission accorded by his imperial Majesty the Emperor to dedicate the book to him" should, if no other consideration had effect, have induced him to take this little trouble. As it is, we regret to say, the confidence has been misplaced, and the crowning honor undeservedly conferred.

AN ORIENTALIST.

TO the ordinary reader the most obvious interest attaching to the amiable and learned Orientalist, whose letters are collected into this bulky volume will be the fact that he was the intimate of Edward FitzGerald and taught FitzGerald Persian—though he was seventeen years older than the author of the Rubaiyat and utterly disapproved of the spirit the latter found in or infused into old Omar. Indeed, though some of the translations were made under Cowell's eye, when the book came to be finished and printed, FitzGerald's mentor "received his copy with something of a shock."

Edward Byles Cowell, thus "alarmed," was born in 1826 in Ipswich, in the County of Suffolk. His grandfather was Abraham Kersey Cowell, "a pious, active, and benevolent gentleman of the old school," and incidentally a prosperous "merchant and maltster." His mother was the daughter of Nathaniel Byles Byles, another prosperous merchant of the same town. At the Ipswich Grammar School young Cowell was exceedingly studious and spent his pocket money on books. Even thus early he began upon Persian and Arabic, reading in these tongues with a retired Bombay officer, one Major Hockley, resident in Ipswich. However, his father, who had succeeded to the grandparental merchant business, crying when the boy was but sixteen years old, and Edward being the eldest son, he had to leave school at that premature stage and enter the counting house, remaining there until his younger brother could be trained to take his place. Meantime he read greedily, especially Greek and Latin, though he was not above French and Italian and plain English, and even novels. About this reading and how it impressed him he wrote much and enthusiastically to his friend and schoolmate George William Kitchin, later Dean Kitchin, to whom, indeed, the greater part of the letters contained in the earlier part of the present volume was addressed. Cowell already wrote for publication, a translation from the Persian by him appearing in The Asiatic Journal in January, 1842, while in The Gentleman's Magazine of December, 1846, (when he was twenty,) appeared "his first striking article," to use the words of his cousin and editor, on "Homeric Influence in the East." By this time, it would seem, his friendship with FitzGerald was established. The editor provides many letters of this period and copious extracts from his early published work. In 1847, when he was still not yet twenty-one, young Cowell married Miss Elizabeth Charlesworth, daughter of the rector of Flowton, near Ipswich. The lady was something over fourteen years his senior, and it is related that when he announced his engagement FitzGerald exclaimed: "The deuce you are! What will you have taken my lady." Certainly the author of the Rubaiyat was no lukewarm admirer of Mrs. Cowell, as a letter of his quoted later will show. It is curious to observe that by way of enlivening the period of his engagement the studious youth, already master of nine languages, wrote daily letters to his fiancée, each containing a lesson in Sanskrit, which he was then learning, and must have the lady learn at the same time. She it was who persuaded her husband when he was twenty-five to go to Oxford and become an undergraduate. Her notion was to have him take orders, for she was an eager evangelical—but this did not lead him quite so far. Her letters quoted in this book indicate that she was vivacious and emphatic—that is, if one may judge by the number of underscored words.

FitzGerald writes thus of her to Tennyson, brother of the Laureate:

> The delightful lady is going to leave this neighborhood and carry her young husband to Oxford, there to get him some Oriental professorship one day. He is a delightful fellow, and I say will, if he live, be the best scholar in England.

FitzGerald opposed the move, Dean Kitchin urged it. Mrs. Cowell writes to the latter:

> But, dear George, we must not look upon this anxious battle as won yet; the object is his passion is Sanskrit—and such wonderful lights upon philology and past history do unfold themselves from the study of that wonderful language. * * * The progress of Sanskrit research is one of the great objects of the age; I must believe that learned men at Oxford would meet and welcome thither a Sanskrit scholar, did they but know about his coming; you know how much sympathy in these studies is to Edward; five scores of real sympathy in his love for Sanskrit or Arabic would do more than all E. F. G.'s [FitzGerald's] arguing. Oh! you have done so much good.

The beauty of this extract lies in Mrs. Cowell's emphasis. Nearly every third word is in italics.

In the following vacation one finds Cowell at Ipswich working tremendously. Yet he writes:

> I have been idle, sadly idle, this vacation; will you be very much shocked? In mathematics I have made fair progress—have had a few lessons with a tutor, and have found much good from it. I am now deep in Calculus, (Differential,) which I am enraptured with. It is stunning. At present I am cutting through it like cheese.

Last Saturday I and Elizabeth and E. F. G. went down and dined with Tennyson, and enjoyed it very much. Alfred the Great was very genial and kind and talked very finely about many things.

In 1853 Cowell, lodging then in Broad Street, Oxford, was near losing his fine library in a manner decidedly comic.

> He just found out in time that his landlord was on the verge of bankruptcy and Cowell, on inquiring, was told by the agent of the landlord's creditors that the goods of the latter could be distrained upon. Cowell, however, heard of it in time, and those wonderful books, scribbled with his valuable notes and the autographs of the writers, were saved to him.

At Oxford, Thackeray was Cowell's guest, and often Tennyson. Smoking was "detested by both" husband and wife, but Tennyson was a privileged guest. "He was always accompanied by his short black pipe when seated at their cosy fireside." FitzGerald was a constant visitor.

In 1856, after taking his degrees at Oxford, Cowell was appointed Professor of History and Political Economy in the Presidency College, Calcutta, a post he sought on account of the opportunities for the study of Oriental languages which it afforded. He was in India during the Mutiny, which did not, however, reach him in Calcutta. Yet there was much alarm, and he tells how with the other men in his hotel he "got a musket with a bayonet and twenty cartridges, and these with my pistols made me well armed." The letters relating to the Mutiny time are not without interest, but may not be quoted here. Cowell learned Bengali and other modern Hindu dialects, and became the head of the Sanskrit college, studying with native scholars or Pundits until he felt he "really knew Sanskrit," writing for the Calcutta Review, and, even on Sundays, teaching Bible classes. Mrs. Cowell, who was, of course, along, had cholera, but survived it. However, the climate was wrecking Cowell's health and he came home on a furlough in 1864. He never returned to India. In 1867 he applied for and obtained election to the Professorship of Sanskrit just established at Cambridge, which post he retained until his death. The editor is so conscientious as to assemble and print for the benefit of the reader the various testimonials collected by his cousin at the time of the canvass letters from Max Müller and others.

Cowell renewed his relations with FitzGerald, who, however, died in 1883; he took also as a recreation to the study of botany and learned Welsh and Norse. His vacations he spent in Wales or in travel on the Continent or over the British Isles. He continued to write, of course, and many letters of this period are included—many of them to his nieces or nephews, some to the present editor—some to people of more importance. As a rule, however, these later letters are not deeply interesting. Cowell received his honorary D. C. L. from Oxford in 1896 along with Thomas F. Bayard, then American Ambassador; Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Mr. John Morley, and Sir Archibald Geikie. In 1898 he was awarded the first Gold Medal of the Royal Asiatic Society. In 1899 Mrs. Cowell died, and during the last year her husband followed her.

The Land of Oz.

THE MARVELOUS LAND OF OZ. Being an Account of the Further Adventures of the Scarecrow and Tin Woodman, and also the Strange Experiences of the Highly Magnified Woggle-Bug, Jack Pumpkinhead, the Animated Saw Horse, and the Gump, the Story Being a Sequel to "The Wizard of Oz." By Frank L. Baum. Pictures by John R. Neill. 8vo. Pp. 287. Chicago: The Reilly & Britton Company. $1.25.

It has come—the season's first gorgeous fairy book! The Scarecrow and Nick Chopper the Tin Woodman, who were the friends of all babies and disported themselves with rare grace through the pages of Mr. Baum's previous volume dealing with the machinations of "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz," have appeared in a sequel to that story, to cheer the eyes of baby readers—the Tin Woodman being especially brilliant in a new coat of nickel plate. There are others with them, however; there is Jack Pumpkinhead, son of Tip, who created him, entirely unaided, out of sticks and a ripe pumpkin; there is the Saw Horse, a knowing animal, who can speed like the wind when commanded; there is Mr. H. M. Woggle-Bug, T. E., which when deciphered means simply a "highly magnified woggle-bug, thoroughly educated"; there is Tip himself, the enchanted daughter of the royal rulers of the great and fertile lands of Oz; and, lastly, there is the Gump—such a creature as never was on land or sea, who flew when commanded and carried the entire goodly company over the tops of houses and mountains from Oz to the land of the Winkies, where reigned in peace and love Nick Chopper; thence far to the south to the gates of that fair country where lived Glinda the good; back again to Oz, where in dignity and rejoicing Tip, now Osma the beautiful, attired in azure robes of gauzy texture, ascended the throne of her ancestors and quenched forever the spirit of revolt which had been kindled at the instigation of General Jinjur, an upstart girl who found her proper level later in washing dishes and tending to the house.

It is a highly entertaining volume, printed in lovely big type, with the most eloquent pictures all done in color, making Jack Pumpkinhead so realistic that any child were he to meet him on the street in the course of a day's outing would surely recognize him.

While as for adventure, the book teems with it, as how could it help doing, seeing that it chronicles the doings of those adventurous spirits the Scarecrow and Nick Chopper. There are witches, too, and fairies, good and bad, also an accommodating colony of field mice; indeed, there are any number of wonderful and extraordinary creatures and things to beguile fretful babies into smiling cherubs. Tip with his sweet seriousness and gentle courtesy recalls more than once that other gentle traveler in strange lands, Alice of undying memory.

MR. ALDEN'S VIEWS.

The Decline of the Art of Novel Writing; Swinburne's Poems, and Other Books.

ACCORDING to Mr. G. B. Street, the English novel is in a dying condition. Writing in The Pall Mall Magazine, Mr. Street asserts that "with Mr. Meredith and Mr. Hardy, the novel, as we have so far known it, has reached its last vital exemplars." Mr. Street thinks that novel writing is to-day far inferior in quality to what it was in the days of Fielding or Thackeray. He does not deny all merit to contemporary English novelists, but thinks that "merely as artists, they are otiose, not vital."

It would doubtless be a very unfortunate thing if our novelists were not "vital," and if it is true that they are "otiose," that must be far worse. I have not a very clear idea of the state of a novelist who is "otiose but not vital," but I presume that it is a state that demands immediate medical attendance, and possibly a course of some newly discovered antitoxin. But when Mr. Street wants us to believe that as artists the novelists of to-day are inferior to Fielding or Thackeray, I am afraid he will not find many persons who will agree with him. "Tom Jones" may be delightful reading, but surely it is the most inartistic novel, so far as construction is concerned, that was ever written. And "Vanity Fair" is not much better. Fielding and Thackeray created certain characters who will never die, and made them the heroes of adventures that will never lose their interest, but there was about as much art shown in the construction of Fielding's and Thackeray's novels as there is in the whitewashing of a ceiling.

***

It may be granted that Mr. Street is right when he complains that contemporary novelists do not use as large canvases as were used by the great novelists of former days. But why judge a novel any more than a picture by its size? One does not say of Giovanni Bellini that he was "otiose and not vital," because his canvases are very small by the side of some of Tiepolo's biggest canvases. A dish of strawberries does not contain as many ingredients as an Irish stew, but we do not therefore judge that the former is greatly inferior to the latter.

It is interesting to learn that of the Temple Classics, "Esmond," "Westward Ho," and "Jane Eyre" have sold to a greater extent than any others of the series. It requires a certain amount of literary taste to be able to appreciate "Esmond." The man who loves "Westward Ho" has a healthy taste, though possibly it may not be highly cultured. And the reader of "Jane Eyre" certainly appreciates strength and prefers it to prettiness. We may fairly congratulate ourselves on the choice which the public has made in purchasing the Temple Classics. Especially is this true of "Esmond." These are the days when historical novels are turned out by the dozens. Compare any one of them with "Esmond," and we might find some justification for Mr. Street's lament. However, "Esmond" is one of the two great historical novels in the English language, and it would be hardly fair to compare any other historical novel with either of the two. If Mr. Street had said that since the days of "Esmond" and "The Cloister and the Hearth" English historical novels had become otiose and not at all vital, it might, perhaps, have been true, though before feeling sure of it we should have to find out what the words "otiose" and "vital" mean in the way in which Mr. Street has used them.

The first poem in Mr. Swinburne's new volume celebrates a passage from Calais to Dover. It is entitled "Three Glad Hours," which would seem to show, first, that Mr. Swinburne was not a particle seasick when he crossed the Channel, and, secondly, that some deadly enemy of his was on board the same boat, and suffered horribly. Of course we cannot know what the poem is until it is published, but of the fact that it does celebrate a passage across the Channel in 1855 there is no doubt, for that much the publishers have already informed us. In 1855 the Channel boats were very small and slow, but they did not take quite three hours to make the passage. Mr. Swinburne's boat must have been delayed either by an accident or by exceptionally bad weather. All the same, he evidently enjoyed himself very much, or else he would not use the expression "three glad hours." Or is it possible that the publisher or the printer has made a mistake, and that Mr. Swinburne really wrote "three bad hours"? That does seem probable the more one thinks of it. Most people have found the hours passed on the Channel exceedingly bad ones.

Mr. William Sharpe has in press a book of "Literary Geography." It will describe the places mentioned in the novels of Dickens, Thackeray, Scott, Stevenson, Meredith, the Brontës, Watts-Dunton, and others, and in addition the book will contain other interesting matter. There has been a good deal of this sort of thing of late, and I rather imagine that the late Laurence Hutton was the pioneer in the field of literary geography, but Mr. Sharpe is a writer to whom we can feelingly trust ourselves. He will not only be thorough in doing what he has undertaken to do, but he will do it in a way that will be entirely unconventional. We may look for a thoroughly delightful book from him, and much of it will be entirely new.

Mr. H. G. Wells has changed the title of his forthcoming book, "The Food of the Gods," and will henceforth call it "The Food of the Gods, and How It Came to Earth."

Among new novels the most noticeable is perhaps Miss Ella Hepworth Dixon's "One Doubtful Hour." It is a collection of stories, all of which are of decided merit. They are not particularly cheerful stories, and those curious people who do not wish to read any story that "does not turn out well" will probably be disappointed with them. But they are well written, and show that Miss Dixon is an artist. There is at present so much reluctance on the part of publishers to publish volumes of short stories that when such a volume does appear the presumption is that there is something rather remarkable about it. This may truly be said of Miss Dixon's book, for it is one of the best collections of short stories that has been published in some time.

The Journalist, which was the organ—or, at least, aimed to be—of the journalists, is dead. About the last thing that a sailor wishes to do is to sail for pleasure, and similarly we might well suppose that about the last thing the journalist wants is a paper of his own. At any rate, nobody seems to have wanted The Journalist, and so it has quietly breathed its last. It was not a bad paper of its kind, but it is a kind which really has no excuse for being. No journalist who has done his day's work wants to read a paper that consists of talks about journalism and journalists. The experiment has been tried times without number of publishing a paper appealing to journalists alone, and it has never been a success.

***

The Athenaeum, which said that the title of Mr. George Moore's new novel was to be "A General Life," admits that it was mistaken. The book is to be called "The Lake." It was a surprise to the readers of The Athenaeum to learn that Mr. Moore had chosen such a very unfortunate title as "General Life," and it is satisfactory to learn that he has done nothing of the kind. Mr. Moore may not be particularly happy in titles, though "Vain Fortune" was certainly a capital title—one with a curious, haunting suggestion about it—but surely he would never have called a novel "General Life" or "Admiral Death."

Mr. Rider Haggard's forthcoming novel, which is to be published on Sept. 10, is to be called "The Brethren." As I said last week, it is to deal with the Crusades. Mr. Haggard recently visited Palestine in search of local color for this book, and without doubt he found it, though why he had to go all the way to Palestine in search of it is not very evident. Perhaps the best local color is that which is found in the depths of one's inner consciousness. A novelist ought to be able to imagine a Palestine as a setting for a story of the Crusades which would be altogether better for his purposes than any photograph of the Holy Land could be. But nowadays the conscientious novelist feels that he must study local color in its proper place. Possibly this may not be due wholly to a conscientious effort after truth. Possibly it may be due to a distrust of one's own imaginative powers.

The Japanese war is still playing havoc with short stories. The newspapers, both daily and weekly, have next to no space for them, and magazines, feeling uncertain as to their circulation just at present, are spending as little money as possible. There are no more ardent advocates of peace than the men and women who make a living by writing. War is the worst enemy they have to contend with. Even Mr. Chamberlain, who at one time threatened to draw off public attention from all imaginative writing except his own statistics, has ceased to trouble. It is the war in the East which is responsible for the dullness of the author trade.

The Winning of Lizzette.

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF BOONE. A Historical Romance of Pioneer Days in Kentucky. 12mo. Pp. 291. Washington, D. C.: The Neale Publishing Company.

The author of this story has notions of the mission and scope of the historical novel and designs this story to exemplify them in a modest way. The notions are in no way different from those accepted in the premises, and the story is much like many other modest attempts in the same field. To be sure there have been better—but then, too, there have been much worse. The hero is a young man named Stone who goes West with the party from Virginia and elsewhere, which settled Harrodsburg, Ky., about 1775. Stone is a brave man and a mighty hunter. He has a half-fledged fancy to fall in love in the very beginning of the narrative with the belle of the settlement, but yields magnanimously to his cabin mate. Later, serving in the wars with the Indians, he has the luck to rescue a girl, all of whose people have just been tomahawked and scalped. The girl is good and pretty and has a nice French name. Stone plays father to her, and all the young men of Lexington, (to which place the action has drifted,) are most eager for her hand, till there comes a stranger from the East—a member of an old Virginia family with his polish still on. He comes within an ace of being a villain, and Lizzette—ah, Lizzette eventually gets a very honest, brave man for a husband. It is worth while to read the story just to hear the fine language Lizzette uses when she has occasion to dismiss a suitor.

American History in 1902.

Anson Ely Morse of the University of [illegible] and Bruce [illegible] of Princeton have [illegible] American History, 1902." It is an "attempt at an exhaustive bibliography of books and articles on United States history published during the year 1902, and some memoranda on other portions of America." As a matter of fact it is really a most comprehensive record of books and magazine articles on our own country, British America, and, to some extent, Latin America as well. The dictionary catalogue scheme has been followed, authors and subjects in one alphabet, as being most convenient for the greatest number. By means of different type the books and articles can be told apart at a glance. The list of periodicals analyzed covers almost seven of the large pages; the catalogue takes 243. A classified index whose heads are enumerated in the table of contents fills another 55. The annotations to the books are very much condensed from reviews in prominent magazines. THE

Knitting of the Souls

By MAUDE CLARK GAY

A Romance of the 17th Century—BOSTON

Until now HAWTHORNE has stood as the historical novelist of Eastern Massachusetts. This new author, Maude Clark Gay, has found here a triumphant opportunity, and her book is in a number of respects worthy the high claim of being better than any previous Colonial novel. The book compels attention by its force and feeling, and pleases by its accurate historical grasp, its graceful diction, and the unusual attractiveness of its illustrations, which are not only the best work of Mr. Merrill, but are put in colors by a process far superior to ordinary color printing.

THE PEPYS BOOKS.

J. R. Tanner's Catalogue of the Naval Manuscripts in the Diarist's Bequest.*

By Arrangement with The London Times.

SAMUEL PEPYS is best known to fame as the author of the incomparable Diary. But, though readers of the Diary must be well aware that its author was for many years Secretary to the Admiralty, they have probably never realized how great his services were in that capacity, how exceptional in his own times was the administrative ability he displayed, and how much more disinterested than that of most of his contemporaries was his devotion to the welfare of the sea service. He was not, indeed, as the Diary abundantly shows, incorruptible according to the standard of modern times, but, judged by the standard of his own days, he seems to have been exceptionally honest and upright, especially in his later years, and a study of his own record of his official career has convinced Mr. Tanner not only that he was "in his way one of the best officials that England ever had," but that in his later years he had become "too proud of the navy and his share in making it what it was to lend himself at any rate to the lower and more obvious forms of corruption." The Diary records under date Feb. 6, 1664-5:

So to my office, and among other things with Sir W. Warren four hours or more till very late, talking of one thing or another, and have concluded a firm league with him in all just ways to serve him and myself all I can, and I think he will be a most useful and thankful man to me.

A few months later—on Sept. 16—Warren's thankfulness took the form of bringing Pepys £100 "in a bag," which Pepys joyfully carried home in a coach. Warren himself "expressly taking care that nobody might see this business done." This sort of thing is not exactly in accordance with modern notions of official rectitude, but Pepys was a comparative novice to official life in 1664, and only became Secretary to the Admiralty in 1673, having previously held a less prominent position. Even in his novitiate, when these and similar things were recorded, he was always trying, as Mr. Tanner says, "to justify to himself the presents which he accepted. He was glad to do the giver a good turn when he could, but he always hoped against hope that it would be 'without wrong to the King's service.'" In those days of universal dishonesty that hope, unsatisfied though it sometimes may have been, must well be accounted to him for righteousness.

Pepys, moreover, was a man of letters as well as a man of affairs, and a man of letters with a very large sense of the importance of his own personality. To this we owe the bequest of his library to Magdalene College, Cambridge, which he had been an alumnus, and the fact that it contains a complete documentary record of his official career at the Admiralty. The Pepysian Library contains some three thousand volumes, and of these about 125 are manuscript volumes relating to the navy. Pepys himself had projected a History of the Navy, which he never executed. With that object he collected a large amount of manuscript material, including copies of his own official letters and records of other transactions in which he had a share. This copious collection of materials has never yet been edited, nor does it seem to have attracted much attention from competent students of naval history, the reason being no doubt that in their present form the manuscripts are, as Mr. Tanner says, of little use to such students, "owing to the difficulty in so large a collection of finding the way to the particular facts required." This difficulty will no longer exist when Mr. Tanner's labors are completed, and the Navy Records Society is not less to be congratulated on its good judgment and public spirit in arranging for the publication of a "Descriptive Catalogue of the Naval Manuscripts in the Pepysian Library" than on its good fortune in securing the services of so competent and painstaking an editor as Mr. Tanner. The calendaring of the whole series will of necessity be a work of some considerable time, but in the meanwhile two volumes have already been issued, one toward the close of last year and the other a short time ago. The first contains a very copious and instructive introduction, "giving some account in general terms of those papers in the Pepysian collection which throw light upon the administrative history of the English Navy in the latter half of the seventeenth century."

The second volume begins the series of "Admiralty Letters"—that is, the official correspondence of the Secretary to the Admiralty during Pepy's tenure of that office, which is preserved in the Pepysian Library in fourteen volumes, two of which, covering the ground from June 10, 1673, to Aug. 31, 1674, are here calendared. As these Admiralty letters are full of allusions to ships and officers of ships, it was wisely determined by Mr. Tanner to devote the portion of his first volume which was not occupied by the introduction to a reprint of Pepys's "Register of the Royal Navy" and his "Register of Sea Officers," which are preserved in two other volumes of the Pepysian collection. These two registers are of great value to the student of Admiralty letters calendared in the second volume, but the chief interest of the two volumes now published lies in the general introduction to the first. The second volume gives access to a portion of the material on which Mr. Tanner's general conclusions are based, and though a large number of the letters calendared refer only to matters of routine, yet, as the editor truly remarks, "many are of interest and a few of considerable importance; while the letter-book as a whole throws a good deal of light on the way in which the navy was administered during the period and on the kind of business transacted in the office of the Secretary." These points are well brought out in a brief introduction to the second volume, which for convenience of collation and reference, is made to follow much the same arrangement as that adopted in the more copious and detailed introduction of the first.

The reign of Charles II. is not a very happy period in the history of the British Navy. Admiral Bridge writes:

Much indignation has been expressed concerning the corruption and inefficiency of the English Government of the day and its failure to take proper measures for keeping up the navy as it should have been kept up. Some, perhaps a good deal, of this indignation was deserved, but it would have been nearly as well deserved by any other Government of the day. . . . Charles II. and his brother the Duke of York have been held up to obloquy because they thought that the coast of England could be defended against a naval enemy better by fortifications than by a good fleet, and, as Pepys noted, "were not ashamed of it." The truth is that neither the King nor the Duke believed in the power of a fleet to ward off attack from an island.

That is, no doubt, true as far as it goes, but it is not the whole truth, as students of the Pepys papers must acknowledge. The Stuart King and Duke have, as Sir Cyprian Bridge shrewdly says, "had many imitators, some in our own day," and it is a significant fact that the prevalence of a belief that forts and sedentary troops are a better defense for an island against oversea attack than a mobile naval force has generally been associated in our history, either as cause or as consequence, with an insufficient and ill-equipped navy. But the vicious theory of defense is no adequate explanation of the shortcomings of the navy in the reign of Charles II. There were fatal faults of administration as well. The navy was neglected, not so much because the rulers of the kingdom saw little use for it as because they were too indolent or too indifferent to insist that such a navy as they had should be honestly and efficiently administered. But, bad as things were during the greater part of the reign of Charles II., Mr. Tanner finds reason in the Pepys papers for thinking that they were not quite so black as they have been painted. The administrative machinery was out of joint, effete, and corrupt withal, and Charles II., in spite of his "love for the navy," which Pepys records and attests, was not the man to set it right. The Duke of York, again, was a good seaman, albeit no very capable or successful one in the sphere of high command, but his efforts as Lord High Admiral, as his brother's chief naval adviser when he ceased to be Lord High Admiral, and as King when he came to the throne himself, were uniformly if not very strenuously directed to the improvement of naval administration. If good intentions without persistence and without strenuous application could have reformed the naval administration of his day, Charles II. might have reformed it.

It was reformed in some measure by James II., so that Pepys could record of the Special Commission of 1686, not without a shrewd glance at his own share of the work, that it had "raised the navy of England from the lowest state of impotence to the most advanced step toward a lasting and solid prosperity that (all circumstances considered) this nation had ever seen it at." James II. was no great commander at sea, but even Macaulay allows that he would have made "a respectable clerk in the dockyard at Chatham." That was something in those days of inefficiency and corruption of what Pepys denounces as "the laziness of one, the private business or love of pleasure in another, want of method in a third, and zeal to the affair in the most"; and it must be reckoned to the credit of James II. that he employed Pepys and supported him. Thus, if we adopt the apology of Admiral Bridge for the shortcomings of the navy under the younger Stuarts, we must adopt it with a difference. They were good administrators in intention, but ineffectual in act. The spirit of the times was against them, and the spirit of the times was largely due to the character of Charles II. himself. Even Pepys, who acknowledged later that few Princes had better understood the business of the sea, was fain to say of him in the Diary that he "do mind nothing but pleasures, and hates the very sight or thoughts of business." No other Government of the time might have done much better, as Admiral Bridge contends, though this is rather a hard saying of a time which numbered Colbert among its statesmen. Anyhow, England had no Colbert in the days of the later Stuarts. We may be all the more thankful that it had a Pepys.

This is undoubtedly the salient point of interest in Mr. Tanner's very valuable introduction. Students of naval history will note and appreciate innumerable points of detail which we must perforce pass over, but no one can read the introduction even cursorily without realizing that the restoration of naval administration from the condition in which Charles II. found it to the condition in which James II. left it was much more the work of Pepys than it was of any other single man. In other words, the genial trifler of the Diary now appears, almost for the first time, as the serious, capable, and energetic man of affairs, the man who, in a frivolous and corrupt age, and not himself entirely untainted with its spirit, nevertheless stood manfully and persistently for efficiency of administration and the maintenance of England's sea power.

THE MOORISH EMPIRE.

The Influence of Its Science, Literature, and Art Upon the Present Age.*

THE object of this history is to depict the civilization of the Moors, the race whose achievements in science, literature, and the arts, Mr. Scott confidently asserts, have been the inspiration of the present age. We think it cannot be questioned that an authoritative account was required of the strange civilization which, beginning in the seventh century, revolutionized Arabia and sped forward in resistless splendor across the Mediterranean to Spain. It is true that Irving and Prescott have added not a little in its later history, and it might seem a task of supererogation to again traverse their territory. But to be complete the final episode in the fall of the empire could not be omitted, nor can one regret the rapid and brilliant marshaling of its facts now set forth—at the completion of twenty years' attentive labor—with regard to historical accuracy. Evidence from the chronicles of Puigar and Bernaldez, eyewitnesses, will not sustain the lamentable scholarship of the pioneer writers of Moorish history, one of whom must have lacked even a familiar knowledge of the Castilian tongue. In these volumes the learning of the late R. Dosy of Al-Makkari, Romey, Rosseuw St. Hillaire, Le Bon, Sedillo, Casiri, and the lore of the original Arab and Spanish chronicles have been conjured with in a style to again evoke, Aladdin-like, the vision of the genius of Islam—of that subtle spirit which, issuing from its barbarous vessel in the East, astonished with a century of Arabian Nights' achievements the ancient States of Babylon, Memphis, Athens, and Carthage, and planted its palaces in Spain. Surely, no more fascinating subject in any epoch of the world's history might be selected.

Mr. Scott is authority for the statement that as the empire was reared by arms alone, the career of the Arab was too rapid to be permanent. "The same causes which facilitated the foundation and advancement of his power and culture were contributed to their ultimate destruction," he says. These causes were, of course, evident in the passions and inherited martial traits of the Arab's character; they sprang from those roving and predatory tastes born of immemorial desert custom, and from the spirit of individual independence and inextinguishable tribal hostility which were his most prominent characteristics. His temperament, impetuous, fiery, vindictive, though admirably fitted for conquest, "was deficient in those qualities of broad statesmanship and impartial discrimination vitally essential to the security and maintenance of government."

How brilliantly inspired, however, were even the dubitable qualities of Arabian character may be observed in the record of the conquests in Northern Africa and Spain. Already after the death of Mohammed, with the possessions of Islam stretching from the Indian Ocean to the Caucasus, comprising not only Arabia, Syria, and Palestine, but also the great empire of the Persians, Egypt, and an adjacent part of the northern coast of Africa, Okbah penetrates to the country of the Berbers, leads his victorious army against Al-Maghrel, and, in the midst of physical disadvantages of barrenness, drought, and excessive heat, builds Kairoan, a walled metropolis, six miles in circuit, with a destiny of greatness among African dynasties. Upon the ruins of ancient Carthage had risen a new Carthage, rivaling its predecessor in commercial importance and architectural splendor. This city is sacked and destroyed by Hassan. Musa makes his slave, Tarik, Governor of Tangier, by the surrender of which the Byzantine domination in Africa comes to an end. Tarik enters Spain, seizes and occupies the ancient town of Carteja, and soon on the banks of the Guadalete, in that battle which changed the destiny of Western Europe, overwhelms Roderick and his Goths and seizes as a trophy the war horse of the slain monarch. Tarik again lays conquering siege to Cordova and when Zeyd takes Toledo, the Visigothic capital, Musa subdues Seville, Malaga, Merida, and Jaen, with Tarik invades Aragon, and takes its capital, Saragossa. Catalonia and Valencia submit, when the remnant of the Visigothic nation, led by a few prelates and yet unconquered chieftains, bears to the fastnesses of Galicia and the Asturias its venerated relics and household gods there to lay the foundations of a new empire. Says our historian:

Less than fourteen months sufficed for the complete and irrevocable overthrow of the Visigothic empire. Within two years the authority of the Moslem was firmly established from the Mediterranean to the Pyrenees. History presents no similar instance of the celerity, the completeness, the permanence of conquest.

Not content with Spain, the Emir Abd-al-Rahman next opens the gateways of the Pyrenees, and the host of Moslems pours through, like an inundation, upon France, to be stayed only when the white standard of the Ommeyades is planted before the walls of Poitiers, and hurled back by the Franks of Charles Martel. By this time the Mohammedans had shaken the foundations of Christendom, and the Pope trembled in the Vatican.

* * * Now the name of the Prophet was revered from the Indies to the Atlantic. The new sect numbered its adherents by millions. * * * The most venerated shrines of Christianity and the cradle of that religion—Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, and Jerusalem—places associated with all that is dear to the followers of our Saviour, and made sacred by miracle, legend, and tradition, were in his hands. Rome and Constantinople, the remaining great centres of Christian faith—the one destined to be attacked by the Moslems of Sicily, the other now menaced by the Moslems of Spain—trembled for their safety. Saracen fleets were already cruising in the eastern Mediterranean. The Musulman standard had been planted on the Loire, 600 miles distant from Mecca. In every country into which Islam had penetrated it had found faithful allies and adherents. * * * Most ominous of all, the test of spiritual truth and inspiration invariably dependent, in the estimation of the credulous, upon superiority in arms, was steadily on the side of the infidel.

But his chief menace to Christendom lay in the fact that the religious system of the "infidel" was in effect better and his civilization superior to the Christian.

While the Christian world was enveloped in darkness and all learning save that of worthless metaphysics and polemic theology had been banished from the minds of men; while England was distracted by Danish and Norman invasion, and barbarous monks defied the authority of her Kings in the very presence of the throne, while Charlemagne was desolating the provinces of Germany by sweeping and merciless proscription; while ecumenical councils were proclaiming the virtues of celibacy and the sanctity of images; while the populace of Rome was amused by the scandal of a female Pope; during this period of intellectual stagnation the Moorish Princes of Spain and Sicily, alone among the sovereigns of the West, kept alive the sacred fires of art, science, and philosophy.

From the review of their civilization it is apparent that in the intellectual as well as in the physical world the success of the Arabs was unprecedented, that their achievements in the fields of literature, science, and art were indeed supreme.

Their poetry, "in elegance of style, in brilliancy of expression, and in fertility of fancy," presents examples not inferior to the finest models of classic antiquity. In the style and rhythm of Dante's verse, of Petrarch's and Ariosto's, we find sensible acknowledgment of their obligations to Arab versification. The tales of Boccaccio have an Oriental cast from Arabic molding. Moorish theology and jurisprudence have established precedents in their respective provinces. History was fostered by the Moors. Every town had its annalist, every province its chronicler. Abulfida enumerates sixty Arabian philosophers who lived before the thirteenth century. The Moslems understood the esoteric doctrines of the most renowned philosophic schools of antiquity; they had their Nominalists and their Realists, their Mystics and their Epicureans. They were developed in the higher branches of mathematics. They inherited astronomy. They invented the almanac and the clock. Through the science of botany they became supreme in the pursuits of agriculture. At a time when the elixir of life was sought with unfinished ardor, they converted their own alchemy into the rational science of chemistry. In pharmacy and the knowledge of curious drugs they excelled all nations. They taught the Middle Ages decent medicine and surgery and built the first real hospitals.

Through their great schools of learning the Moors taught Christendom. To Al-Hazen came the Englishmen Adelard of Bath, Robert of Reading, Daniel Morley, William Shelley, and the Italian Gerard of Cremona; Al-Hazen's works were used as textbooks in the Andalusian Colleges. In the University of Cordova the scholar-Pope Gerbert (Sylvester II.) was educated. The precocity and vast intellectual powers of the great scholars of Islam are almost beyond belief. For example, Avicenna, at sixteen, had attained to such eminence "that learned and experienced physicians came from remote countries to enjoy the benefit of his wisdom; at twenty-two he was Grand Vizier."

By the conquest of the intellect, not by the sword, did the Moors establish their creative and lasting influence upon Western civilization. It is in this domain—of science, literature, and the arts—that Mr. Scott grounds his thesis, and declares that the Moorish civilization has given an impetus to modern life. For this reason he has made his history something more than an account of the rise and fall of dynasties. It is his belief that Arabic intellectual life, and especially its culmination in the Spanish Peninsula, the phenomenal rapidity of its advance and the superhuman greatness of its deeds, "suggests the infinite possibilities to which its revival may ultimately give rise as affecting the destiny of nations." In the achievements of Moslem genius he makes acknowledgment of the liberal policy of Islam, and the daily application by its adherents of the lofty sentiment of its prophet: "Whoso pursues the road of knowledge, God will direct him to the road of paradise. Verily, the superiority of a learned man over a mere worshipper is like that of the full moon over all the stars!" Contrasted with the narrow maxims of the Christian communion in the Dark Ages the Moors gave an exhibition of universal charity, of broad philanthropy, of educational advantages impartially bestowed. The ruling of Mohammed above quoted, the historian believes, accounts for the marvelous spirit of inquiry and adaptation by which the Arabs learned of their captive nations, and in turn imparted their accumulated stores of knowledge. During a few vital centuries the doctrine of Mohammed educated Europe. While the world of Western Christendom remained broken and barren, the forgotten sciences which the Greeks and Egyptians had begun were cherished among the Moors, and enriched from other sources, and finally given up to Christendom again when the nations of the West had become conscious of the necessity and possibility of effective work, and ambitious to begin it. This was the important mission for general civilization of the Mohammedan Moors.

A Book of Travels.

"In Many Lands" is the title of a book of travels by "A Member of the Order of Mercy," and author of "Leaves from the Annals of the Sisters of Mercy," "Life of Catherine McAuley," "Essays, Educational and Historical," &c. The author visited Liverpool, London, Warwick, Kenilworth, Rome, Florence, Genoa, Milan, Paris, and other places. She went through Westminster Abbey, the Cathedral of Canterbury, and other noted edifices in England, had an audience of Pope Pius IX. and of the late Leo XIII., and saw much else that interested her. The trip was taken not for her own good, but, as the Rev. Fereol Girardey, C. SS. R., writes in a letter which is placed as a preface to the book, "solely for the Divine Glory, the good of souls, and the welfare of her holy order." (The writer of "Many and this is especially the case with the class we may call religious travelers. Every day is a festival in some church. What treasures of holy associations, of saintlike traditions, of precious remains of pious men and women, now with God! The Holy City, the City of God, the City of the Soul! How often the pilgrim of other days goes back in spirit to the favored region which has the largest church, the largest palace, the largest hospital, the largest tomb in the world! How often does he not roam through all the regions, from church to church, from convent to convent, from one sacred spot to another! And what a comfort to think, "I am in Rome once more," though it be but in spirit, "in my Father's home on earth," the best representation, no doubt, of His home in heaven. It seems as if we are nearer to God in Rome than elsewhere.

This and the Next World.

In his "romance of two worlds," entitled "In the End," Frederick Rogers, D. C. L., author of "Le Roman D'une Pussie Chat," has attempted to give a picture of the future life. It is a story of some of the inhabitants of a village community, showing their human side. The author describes their troubles, romances, wrongs, and worries in the first half of his story, entitled "In This World." In the second part, called "In The World That Sets This Right," the characters are always happy. This is to some extent a continuation of the life that is good here. The people continue their love, their pursuits, and pleasures under the eye and within the knowledge of the Master. The author shows that the companionships and enjoyments of earth are continued in heaven, minus the selfishness and wickedness. The book reveals Mr. Rogers's love of nature, children, and everything beautiful. He believes, he points out in his preface, in that love which makes

Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one.

He believes that there is "romance" in heaven, and that love never dies. The works of Drummond, Sheldon, and particularly Ruskin, are the author's inspiration. The book is written in very simple language. It is printed in clear type and bound in silk-covered boards. It is a 16mo in size and contains 229 pages. (New York: The Editor Publishing Company, $1.)

Carlyle on Burns.

In the introduction to Thomas Carlyle's "Essay on Burns," Prof. Edwin Mims of Trinity College, North Carolina, gives an account of Carlyle's life and work, his character and influence, a review of the essay, and a brief bibliography of Robert Burns. Prof. Mims says of Carlyle's character and influence:

If one seeks as Carlyle does in the case of Burns, for the source of the tragedy of his life—and tragical in a sense his life was—he will find it in his impatience. The smallest things of life irritated him beyond measure. * * * Carlyle's work irritated him; he groaned under it as under an intolerant burden. * * * He was impatient with his age. * * * He knew nothing of what it meant either for the individual or the nation to work within limitations. He found a cure for the evils of his age either by trying to bring back some age that was passed away or by evoking some sudden transformation. * * * Carlyle had the temperament of a prophet rather than the ability to construct and organize institutions and forces. * * * He was not a man to make distinctions, he overstated things, but the overruling passion of his life was to arouse the people of England to a sense of the reality of a just and sovereign God. * * * It is the vigor of his moral teaching that has made Carlyle such a force in his century. * * * Carlyle was not, however, a mere teacher. He was one of the greatest of artists. But is extravagant and eccentric in his language as in his thought.

The essay on Burns, the editor writes, "is notable as a type of the best literary criticism." He has given the poet his true place in the life of the world, in spite of his unsympathetic attitude toward poetry. As in many of his later works, Carlyle here gives expression "with a 'sweet reasonableness'" to his faith. ("Carlyle's Essay on Burns." In the Gateway Series. Red cloth cover. Pp. 160. With notes. Frontispiece portrait of Carlyle. New York: The American Book Company.)

Poems of Wither and Shakespeare.

Two new volumes have been added to Newnes's Pocket Classics, (16mos., gilt tops, Japanese vellum title pages. Photogravure frontispieces. London: George Newnes. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25 each.) They are, "Poems of George Wither," (pp. 224,) and "Shakespeare's Poems and Songs," (pp. 228.)

The Shakespeare volume contains the poems, "Venus and Adonis," "Lucrece," "A Lover's Complaint," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "The Phoenix and the Turtle," songs and lyrics from the plays, sonnets, and miscellaneous songs and "sanzches."

"The Poems of Wither" include "Philarete to His Mistress," "The Shepherd's Hunting," "Their Virtue: or The Mistress of Philarete," and seven other poems—"A Song," "A Dream," "A Christmas Carol," "A Sonnet Upon a Stolen Kiss," a couplet on "Marriage," "An Epitaph upon the Porter of a Prison," and some lines on "The Invention of the Nine Muses."

George Wither lived from 1588 to 1667. His life was full of adventure. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and became a barrister. His first volume, "Abuses Stript and Whipt," was published in 1613, and immediately the author was lodged in jail, where he wrote "The Shepherd's Hunting." In 1618 he "Hymns to" appeared, and in 1622 his "Fair Virtue." When the civil war broke out in England he sold his estates, raised a troop of cavalry, and was taken prisoner. He was several times sentenced to death, but was exchanged and ransomed by Cromwell, and at the Restoration was again put into prison, he claimed on account of debts due him from the government. HARPERS BOOK NEWS.

A LADDER OF SWORDS

This is the first novel that Sir Gilbert Parker has written since "The Right of Way." The author calls it "a tale of love, laughter, and tears,"—and it is the romantic life story of two young people, first on the island of Jersey and, later, at Queen Elizabeth's court. Scenes of idyllic charm are interspersed with strong dramatic episodes, written with the same masterly power that produced "The Right of Way." The pictures are unusually attractive.

VERGILIUS

Turning from stories of rural life, so successfully achieved in "Eben Holden" and "Dr'i and I," Irving Bacheller has produced in "Vergilius" a brilliant picture of the dawn of the Christian era. The quaint and pretty love tale, suffused with the glamour of pagan mysticism, rounds to a beautiful, thrilling close at Bethlehem on the eve of the Nativity. The work will be a revelation and pleasing surprise to the thousands of readers of "Eben Holden."

JESS & CO.

A new story by J. J. Bell that will rank with his popular "Wee Macgreegor" stories in originality, humor and charm. The people of the story are various members of a little Scotch village, and their gossip abounds in the same dry humor and keen repartee which marked the author's success in his former books. "Jess & Co." has all the true feeling of "Wee Macgreegor," and in addition offers a variety and charm wholly its own.

JOSEPHINE

A new book for girls, by Ellen Douglas Deland, following the adventures of Josephine and her little sister, who go to live with an uncle in the East. Their names—"Jo and Georgie"—lead him to think the newcomers are boys, and this is only one of the many surprises and delightful turns of this entertaining story.

LEADING FICTION OF THE YEAR.
Sir Mortimer, by Mary Johnston.

A romance of Elizabethan days of such poetry and charm that it rivals in interest all current-day tales of adventure.

Rulers of Kings, by Gertrude Atherton.

It possesses a supreme interest over the fiction of the hour, because of its unique and daring exposition of present-day conditions.

Brewer Jim's Baby, by Philip Verrill Mighels.

Skeezucks is a new creation in babyland, a quaint and pathetic unit of humanity, and Brewer Jim as a masculine Madonna of the plains is worth knowing.

The Memoirs of a Baby, by Josephine Daskam.

This is the most novel and successful thing Josephine Daskam has done. With the live drawings by F. Y. Cory which accompany the pages, it is easily the funniest book of the year.

Breaking Into Society, by Caroline [illegible]

THE TRUE CONSTITUTION.

Suppose that a man wished to do two things inconsistent one with the other. Suppose that he wished much more strongly to do the first than the second, but was not so clearly conscious of his wish. Finally he does the second thing, and long after wakes up to the fact that he has really done the first, and goes on his way rejoicing. That does not sound like a very simple or practical statement of human experience. Reduced to its plainest form, it appears perilously near absurd. It is not a grossly exaggerated account of the way the "American Constitutional System" came into operation according to Westel Woodbury Willoughby, Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Johns Hopkins University. He has written a most interesting and informing volume on the subject, which is the introduction to a series of volumes on "The American State," (The Century Company.)

Substantially we should say that the fundamental idea of Prof. Willoughby is indicated in the brief passage relating to the formation of the American State at the close of the eighteenth century. "If it be admitted," he says, "that, as a matter of fact, a single sovereign State has come into being, its conditioning basis must be considered to have been the feeling of national unity that first created it a single political body out of a number of sovereign peoples, and then gave to it an objective organization." This feeling of national unity was so strong among the dwellers within the United States under the Confederation that it would not brook the limitations, the defects, the impotence, the confusion and humiliations imposed by that form of government. When they met through their delegates in the great convention of 1787 they undoubtedly had in mind the formation of a more perfect union, in which the division of powers between the General Government and the various States was deeply pondered, and the scheme at which the delegates at last arrived was closely and hotly debated in the conventions called to adopt or reject it. There was the utmost jealousy of a "strong" central government. After the adoption of the Constitution, parties immediately sprang up the contests of which were not wholly settled even at Appomattox, contests that turned on the question whether the Union was or was not indissoluble save by revolution and by the creation of new nations from its severed parts.

Prof. Willoughby analyzes with great care and notable candor the outcome of the Constitutional Convention and the contests which ensued. He demonstrates —the term is not too emphatic—that whatever were the ideas of individual delegates and however they were embodied in restricting provisions, the powers actually conferred on the General Government, either explicitly or by implication, were such as gradually made it an efficient organization for the operation of a sovereign nation.

One by one as the years passed they brought occasions in the life of the people when powers theretofore novel or disputed had to be exercised or things essential to the satisfaction of the "feeling of national unity" must be left undone. When these alternatives were presented the several branches of the National Government, each by itself or in unison, sometimes more or less clumsily and confusedly, did these things, their power to do them was recognized, and the fabric of the actual Constitution took form. The chief instrument in this evolution was naturally the Supreme Court of the United States, though Washington in the suppression of the insurrection in Pennsylvania against the internal revenue laws set the pace in 1794. Ten years later came the famous decision in the case of The United States vs. Fisher, in which it was announced that Congress "must be empowered to use any means which are in fact conducive to a power granted by the Constitution." It was the logical interpretation of this and ensuing decisions that made Calhoun declare them "wholly inconsistent with the Federal theory of government, though in perfect accordance with the National theory." Whatever the theory, the result was a nation which exercised the essential powers of nationality, maintained its authority, suppressed by force efforts to disintegrate it, acquired territory by purchase, by discovery, and by conquest, and ruled it.

Prof. Willoughby's book is especially valuable for the clear manner in which he succinctly traces this process and the fullness with which he indicates the sources of his conclusions, which the student can consult if he wishes. He is quite justified in his hope that "it will be found not only interesting to the general reader, but serviceable as a textbook for academic classes beginning the study of the public law and political practice of our country."

"THEY."

Demands for an explanation of the symbolism in Rudyard Kipling's beautiful story called "They," printed in the August number of Scribner's Magazine, reach us by every mail. The wonder is that a person failing to understand, or refusing to understand, a single story in a magazine should not be content to let it pass and satisfy himself with the entertainment and instruction afforded by the other stories and articles.

As we intimated last week, it is perilous to undertake to interpret Kipling in his moods of fantasy. You cannot so reduce poetical symbolism to practical terms as to satisfy the literal mind. One who asks, irritably, the meaning of "Sordello," and "Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came" is not to be satisfied with the reply of any one initiate of the Browning cult, or any dozen.

Kipling is a poet, too, and his story called "They" is a poem in prose form, in which some of the practical things of contemporary life are fancifully brought into contact with the mystical things of an imaginary world. Thus the bereaved poet, mourning the loss of his child, goes upon a solitary journey in a motor car. His way lies through familiar English scenery, the beauty of which strongly impresses him, until he finds himself in an unknown wood, which clearly belongs in the realm of fancy, as does the Elisabethan mansion, with its ancient lawns and gardens, by which the lost motor car and its driver emerge. This mansion is presided over by a beautiful woman, a spinster and blind, and is peopled with the souls of dead children. She is possessed of a great love for children. She once believed that these were the souls of children that might have been hers, but they are of no nearer kinship than love makes them. Among them is the lost child of the wandering poet.

Does the fancy require more interpretation? The sense of color in the blind has been mentioned in literature before. The relation of certain colors to the passions and emotions has been made the subject of scientific treatises. There is mystery in "They," but it is no deeper than the mystery of "The Brushwood Boy" and "The Finest Story in the World." The charm of this tale appeals strongly to those persons who mourn the loss of children. It has no practical significance.

Southern Poets.

The newest of Maynard's English Classic Series, No. 241, is "The Southern Poets," by T. W. Abernethy, Principal of the Berkeley Institute, Brooklyn. It includes selected poems of Sidney Lanier, Henry Timrod, and Paul Hamilton Hayne, with biographical and critical introductions and explanatory notes. The editor considers these three men true Southern poets, and for this reason he thinks their poetry should be read and studied in American schools.

The lives of all three were peculiarly alike. They all fought in the War of the Rebellion, and each came out of it with ruined fortunes and incurable diseases. The poems of Sidney Lanier chosen for this pamphlet are: "The Marshes of Glynn," "Song of the Chattahoochee," and "Corn." Those of Henry Timrod, "The Cotton Boll," "The Lily Confi- [illegible] of Paul Hamilton Hayne, "Unveiled," "The First Mocking-Bird in Spring," "Aspects of the Pines," and "Lyric of Action." The biographical and critical introduction, and explanatory notes are very clear and concise.

Irish Literature.

The intent and purpose of the ten-volume work on "Irish Literature," which is being published by John D. Morris & Co. of Philadelphia, is indicated in the first paragraph of the introductory article by Justin McCarthy, the editor of the work. He says:

"Irish Literature" is intended to give to the reading world a comprehensive, if only rapid, glance at the whole development of literary art in prose and poetry from the opening of Ireland's history. I may say at once that when I use the words "opening of Irish history" I do not intend to convey the idea that the survey is limited to that period of Ireland's story which is recognized as coming within the domain of what we call authenticated historical narrative. The real history of most countries, probably of all countries, could be but little understood or appreciated, could hardly be proved to have its claim to authenticity, if we did not take into account the teachings of myth and legend. This is especially to be borne in mind when we are dealing with the story of Ireland. Only by giving full attention to the legends and poems, the memory of which has been preserved for us from days long before the period when the idea of authentic history had come into men's minds, can we understand the character and the temperament of the Irish race.

The work contains examples of the writings of Irish historians, novelists, poets, scientists, orators, wits, dramatists, travelers, essayists, biographers, &c. The material has been arranged in alphabetical order. Special articles on Irish literature and Irish life have been written by such well known authorities of to-day as Justin McCarthy, Dr. Douglas Hyde, Michael McDonagh, D. J. O'Donoghue, Charles Welsh, Stephen Gwyn, W. B. Yeats, Lady Gregory, Dr. George Sigerson, and others. The tenth volume contains brief biographies of ancient Celtic authors, translations from whose works appear in the previous nine books under the names of translators. It also contains, printed in Gaelic characters, with English translations on opposite pages, a number of folk tales, ranns, (Irish sayings or proverbs,) several ancient and modern Irish folk songs, stories, and historical sketches by modern writers, and a play by Dr. Hyde, entitled "The Twisting of the Rope." The volumes are fully illustrated with portraits and reproductions of photographs of noted Irish scenery. Besides facsimiles of ancient Irish manuscripts and books, prints, broadsides, &c., in color, half-tone, and duotone.

Colonial History.

The first volume of "The United States, 1607-1904: A History of Three Centuries of Progress in Population, Politics, Industry, Commerce, and Civilization," by William Estabrook Chancellor and Fletcher Willis Hewes, is announced for publication in September by G. P. Putnam's Sons. The book is entitled "Colonization, 1607-1687," and is a "record of the settlement of the twelve English colonies of the seventeenth century, preceded by a brief review of the period of discovery and settlement." There are 150 maps and diagrams, and the frontispiece is a photogravure from an old engraving of Capt. John Smith. The volume contains diagrams and tables at the end of each chapter showing the successive stages of our industrial and financial development, while at the end is a summary of the contents and a list of references for each chapter. Mr. Chancellor has written about the population, politics, wars, and civilization; Mr. Hewes, about the industries, commerce, finance, and statistics. The latter has also prepared the diagrams, perspectives, and a large number of the maps.

Conrad's "Nostromo."

Joseph Conrad's "Nostromo" will be published in this country Sept. 15 by Messrs. Harper & Brothers. The story has already received frequent mention in these columns, especially in the foreign correspondence. The Polish-Englishman's tale relates the adventures of a Genoese sailor in a South American republic, with scenes of passion, love, terror, hate, and bloodshed done in Mr. Conrad's minute, intense, and heart-gripping fashion. Nostromo is the sailor's name, and he is a coal man in a very hot kettle of fish.

Mark Twain's Book.

It is announced that the only book to come from Mark Twain during the present Autumn will be his already somewhat discussed "A Dog's Tale," to be published Sept. 15 by Messrs. Harper & Brothers. Illustrations in color are furnished by W. T. Smedley, and the binding will be such as to fit the volume for use as a holiday gift book.

Supplies for the Army.

Major Caleb Huse's little pamphlet on "The Supplies for the Confederate Army," which was noticed in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW of Aug. 27, can be secured from Major Huse at Highland Falls, N. Y. It is printed by J. R. Marvin & Son of Boston, Mass.

"American Small Arms."

The address of the Bradford Company, publishers of Edward S. Farrow's book on "American Small Arms," receipt of which we acknowledged last week, is 127 East Twenty-seventh Streeet, New York City. The Bradford Company has in preparation a new edition of Farrow's "Military Encyclopaedia."

ENGLISH INNS.

We must take exception to one piece of advice given by Miss Josephine Tozier to Americans intending to make a pilgrimage to England, in her charming new book called "Among English Inns," which has just been published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. of Boston. Miss Tozier says, speaking of railway travel in England:

Choose to buy third-class tickets, except when traveling at night or on a holiday. You will find yourself perfectly comfortable, and in company more than respectable socially. First-class fare is nearly double in price, and on some of the English railways there are no second-class carriages. It looks knowing to use third class.

We are quite sure that it will be better for the comfort and peace of mind of Americans in England to travel second class instead of third class on the railways that have second-class carriages. Third class in the South of England is apt to be uncomfortable traveling. On the northern roads, as on the through trains of the London and Northwestern, and on the Scotch trains, the third-class carriages are comfortable, and there is generally no second class. Otherwise we entirely approve of Miss Tozier's advice to her readers, and of her book, which describes lucidly some delightful trips in the south, southeast, west, and middle of England.

***

The first of the inns is the Queen's Arms, at Selborne, in Hampshire, Gilbert White's Selborne, whither Miss Tozier and her friends went from Southampton by train to Alton, and thence by carriage on a winding road among green hills. On the way they passed Jane Austen's Chawton, and they found the village of the naturalist, the hanger, the Wakes, the plestor, the Norman Church, all that fancy had painted them, while the inn itself was delightful. From Hampshire to Chagford, in Devon, and thence to Okehampton and Clovelly and Ilfracombe, and then the party journeyed northward to Evesham, where they stayed in a farmhouse on Clerk's Hill, visiting the Avon villages at leisure. Evesham is near Broadway, the home of artists and writers, and its Lygon Arms. Tewksbury and Rowsley, Bolsover and Hardwick, (one of the seats of the Dukes of Devonshire,) Boston and Norwich, Wymondham and Blickling are a few of the other places pleasantly described. A whole Summer, such a clear, dry Summer as they had in England in 1901, might be well spent in such reasonable, leisurely journeying as this of Miss Tozier and her friends.

The book is admirable as a record of impressions. The author spares us statistics and history. She touches lightly and rather humorously, though not irreverently, on the labors of Gilbert White, in treating of Selborne. She is aware of the innumerable editions of White's books, and of the favor in which he and his home have been held by the magazine writers. On the way to Chagford they passed the Lorna Doone country, Exmoor, while Chagford itself is rich in historic associations. In Devon they journeyed through the Charles Kingsley country and visited scenes described in some of his books. At Boston they found St. Botolph's church, with a spire wonderfully like the old belfry at Bruges. In Norwich they stopped at the old Tudor Inn, lately remodeled and restored, associated with memories of Sir John Paston, the Walpoles, the Oxfords, the Howards, and the Bullens. In the neighborhood of Norwich was the birthplace of George Borrow. Norwich was also, if we are not mistaken, the cathedral town described in "The Heavenly Twins." It is not often visited by American tourists. Here is a passage recording some of Miss Tozier's impressions:

Norwich has only within the last year or so been put in the itinerary of the well-known tourist agencies. Not only for its noted cathedral, still inclosed by the great wall surrounding it in monkish times, but for the mixture of old and new, is this city original and charming. Its position in the centre of a most interesting county lends additional motives for attraction of visitors.

The cathedral is within a stone's throw of the Maid's Head. Its beautiful cloisters and splendidly carved gateways do honor to architects long forgotten, while its tall spire towers loftily above the many churches in its neighborhood. Near to the cathedral, upon Tombland Square, stand many noble and ancient houses. The most interesting of these is now become an antiquity shop, and is called the House of the Giants, from two great figures which support the coping over the entrance porch. * * * George Borrow's description of Norwich is as graphic to-day as when the author of "Lavengro" first wrote it. "A fine old city," he calls it, "view it from whatever side you will * * * its thrice twelve churches, its mighty mound, which, if tradition speaks true, was raised by human hands to serve as a grave heap for a heathen King." The mound is still topped by a castle, but one of modern date, while at the bottom, on Saturdays, crowds gather to inspect the fine, fat cattle raised on Norfolk's rich pasture lands. * * * Opposite the horse and cattle markets, through a narrow street at the foot of the mound, runs the electric tram, at once the terror and the delight of the Norwich citizen. It is not a formidable danger, judged from the standpoint of a dweller in New York, and it winds through narrow and quaintly framed streets, along Unthank Road, Rampant Horse Street, Grape Lane, The Gentleman's Walk, Timber Hill, and so on to Mousehold Heath, the city's park and pleasure ground.

LONDON NEWS.

Anthony Hope's Forthcoming Novel—The Saint Beuve Centenary.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1904.]

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Anthony Hope is now putting a finishing touch to a new novel which, in temper and method, is said to be classed with his Zenda books, certainly the most popular of all his writings. The recently published novel of Hope, "Double Harness," though accounted a graphic study of modern social life, and containing one passage of extraordinary power, has disappointed those admirers of Hope who always expect from him a blend of fun and romance.

Scouting During the Boer War.

Longmans, Green & Co. are about to bring out here a book on the Boer War, by Major Dennison, D. S. O., leader of the band of scouts which bore his name. At the end of the war he found his experiences to include capture twice, a couple of wounds, numerous skirmishes and hot corners, and the loss of two sons. At the beginning of the war, at the siege of Kuruman, Dennison, with sixty-three men, occupied 1,300 Boers for seven weeks, and would have held out a month longer had not the enemy brought up a cannon. The surrender was followed by many months in prison at Pretoria and Waterval. In 1900 Dennison became attached to several columns operating in the West Transvaal. He raised a body of scouts of about 200 strong, who were the eyes of the Kimberley columns. The Major did not approve of the burning of farms and the destruction of stock, and he criticises these actions in his book. He speaks of the jealousy between certain British column commanders. It was this "deplorable" jealousy that prevented the capture of De Wet, "the will-o'-the-wisp."

The second time Major Dennison was captured was near Paardeberg, when he and a number of other officers of the Kimberley column were sight-seeing. They took a strong force, and, because the Major's orders were not carried out, there was "wild and disgraceful flight" on the part of some, and the end of it was that the party was captured and their leaders rather roughly handled. On the way to the Dutch quarters he conversed with his guard. He was asked by the Boer whether he knew Dennison, and when he last saw him. Dennison was told that, if he should be caught, it would be a happy event for the Boers. "We never get a chance when his scouts are with the English, and we know he is an Afrikander like ourselves." Asked what they would do with Dennison, the guard replied that some would want to shoot him outright, but if the leaders were present at his capture they "would send him away to some safe place until the war is over."

Word-Etymology.

A. Smythe Palmer, D. D., author of "Folk-Etymology," "A Word-Hunter's Note-Book," "A Misunderstood Miracle," "Babylonian Influence on the Bible," &c., has written a new book on the use of words and their meanings, which E. P. Dutton & Co. will shortly bring out in this country under the title, "The Folk and Their Word-Lore: An Essay in Popular Etymologies." This contains the corrections made from his previous work on the subject which appeared in 1882, besides the explanation of some new words. Mr. Palmer has chapters on "Foreign Words Metamorphosed," "Popular Etymologies," "The Folk as Etymologists," "Words Popularly Mistaken," "Some Verbal Corruptions," "Mistaken Analogies," "Misinterpretations," and "Folk-Etymology."

The New Seismology.

In the preface to his volume on "Earthquakes, in the Light of the New Seismology," shortly to appear in G. P. Putnam's Sons' Science Series edited by Edward Lee Thorndike, Ph. D., and F. E. Beddard, M. A., F. R. S., Clarence Edward Dutton, United States Army, gives an outline of its contents. He writes:

Chapter I. sets forth the nature of an earthquake according to the modern concepts. * * * Chapter II. is a general discussion of the causes of earthquakes. * * * Thus we have two groups of quakes—the volcanic and the tectonic. They have in many cases distinct characteristics, and these are described in Chapters III. and IV. Two chapters, V. and VI., describe in detail the more important instruments used in seismometry. * * * Chapter VII. discusses the details of seismic vibratory motion and explains the four kinds of waves with which the inquiry deals * * * the kinetic elements of harmonic or vibratory motion are space and time—i. e., the distance traversed and the time of traversing it—in other words, the amplitude and period of vibration. To this subject a chapter is given. * * * Passing then to the kinetic aspects of seismic vibration, the subject of intensity is treated of in two chapters. * * * The chapter on variations of intensity points out the method of computing the depth of origin of an earthquake whenever observations sufficient in number and accuracy can be obtained. Other considerations relative to depth of origin are also discussed. The speed of propagation of seismic vibrations is then treated of. * * * Since the speed of propagation depends wholly upon the ratio of elasticity to density, it becomes an index of those properties in the materials which compose the earth's interior. Chapter XIII. is given to the discussion of this aspect of the subject. * * * The subject of earthquake distribution, or seismic geography, is treated of in two chapters. * * * The final chapter is devoted to the discussion of seaquakes, a subject which has been investigated with great diligence by Dr. Emil Rudolph of Strassburg.

Six South American Republics.

Vol. II. of the history of "The South American Republics," by Thomas C. Dawson, formerly Secretary of the United States Legation to Brazil and now Minister to Santo Domingo, is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons. It deals with Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia, and Venezuela. The history begins with the time "when Pizarro and Almagro, Valdivia and Benalcazar led their desperadoes across the Isthmus to the conquest, massacre, and enslavement of the prosperous and civilized millions who inhabited the Pacific Coast of South America. It ends with the United States opening a way through that same Isthmus for the ships, the trade, the capital of all the world; with American engineers laying railroad iron on the imperial highway of the Incas, with British bondholders forgiving stricken Peru's national debt, with their debtor bravely facing the fact of bankruptcy, and turning over to them all its railways." The book is to be No. 66 in the Story of the Nations Series, of which No. 67 was Vol. I. of Mr. Dawson's history, in which he told the stories of Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Brazil. The author writes in the preface to the new volume:

Every patriotic American must hope that his own countrymen will devote the money, energy, and attention essential to secure that share of influence and trade justly due the United States geographical proximity and political sympathy; that French literature, language, and ideas, British capital and German commerce, now so dominant in all South America, will be supplemented by American schools, money, and commercial enterprise, and that such influences will spread from Panama through Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia down the coast to prosperous Chile and across into the fertile plains of Argentina and Southern Brazil.

The "Ideal" Mother.

B. Gwernydd Newton, author of "Glimpses of God," has compiled a volume on "The Ideal Mother," being "meditations on the character and crown of the God-fearing mother." The purpose of the book is "to reproduce a picture which is cherished in every heart, and to say to all what the Master said to the beloved disciple, 'behold thy mother.'" It endeavors to trace the development of the "ideal" mother "from grace to grace and glory to glory, in the hope of awakening thereby a desire in the reader's heart to cultivate and to cherish the gentler virtues of which the devout mother is the divinest expression on earth." The author emphasizes what the "ideal" mother owes to the "inspiration of the Master and what the reader owes to the inspiration of the ideal mother."

The first part of the volume is "a monologue of the orphaned heart, breathing sweet memories of the departed mother" broken reflections." The chapters are: "Behold Thy Mother," "The Lily in His Garden," "A Handful of Flowers," "Sweet Meditation," "The Fragrant Life," "The Lily in the Home," "The Melody of Motherhood," "Sunset and Vesper Song," "The Lily in His Hand," "Treasured Fragrance."

The second part is designed to portray the "ideal" mother's service, sacrifice, and sovereignty through the study of representative examples. For the most part the book has been written in short paragraphs because of the hope of the author to "inspire the soul (of the reader) to appreciate the beautiful and the fragrant, and to yearn for the beauty of holiness." G. P. Putnam's Sons will bring the book out early next month.

Sociology.

B. Russell's book on "First Conditions of Human Prosperity" is intended as "a small contribution" to the study of sociology, and based "on a great deal of patient investigation by many qualified observers." The author's object is to demonstrate, from a scientific basis, the outlines of some of the chief conditions of physical prosperity in various nations, the geography of their powers, the origins of the health of races, and the morbid elements of their decline. It is the author's belief, he points out in his preface, that only a realization of the causes of decay in the great empires of the past, and a determination to maintain the springs of health, can save the modern empire from a like fate. At the beginning of the book Mr. Russell writes:

We have reached a stage in the growth of the human race when a general understanding of the elements which make for human strength and progress should secure the utmost value for the retention of the gains of our life history and for continued advancement in future. The conditions of life are rapidly becoming more uniform over large tracts of the globe, and the effects caused by vicious modes of living among nations will soon cease to be clearly traceable. There is a fine saying, "through difference progress," and to the differences between persons and nations we owe the beauty of the flowers and the richness of the fruit which spring from thought, giving their attainents freely to the whole world. Difference is found in every genus, in every species of animal, and in every family of each species. * * * If we allow scope to the personal elements men will continue to differ greatly with advantage to the race. But the fashions which nations adopt from each other, and the blighting influence of conventionality, bring them ever nearer to uniformity.

Magazine Notes.

Among the contributors to the October number of The Delineator are Richard Le Gallienne, Ellen Douglas Deland, and Ethel Watts Mumford. The last-named begins a new story, "A Matter of Millions." Christine Terhune Herrick writes of field hockey as a new form of recreation for girls; the article is presented with the hope of giving this healthful exercise a wider popularity in America, and is strikingly illustrated. The story of Mary Dunlevy concludes the series on "Great Women of Pioneer Times," and physical exercise is discussed in "The Fountain of Youth."

Theodore L. De Vinne contributes to The Printing Art for September an article on "The Sizes of Books." He shows the origin of the names applied to the sizes, such as octavo and 12mo. Other articles are on "The Use of Paper Labels in Bookbinding," "The Alignment of Initials," and "The Use of Rules."

The Fireproof Magazine for September contains articles on the construction of notable buildings in New York, including THE TIMES Building, in Times Square, a picture of which, in the course of construction, appears on the magazine's cover. Other articles are "Permanence in Building," by C. J. Mayers; "Beams and Arches," by W. L. Parry, and "The Story of Steel," by Charles Eugene Banks. The magazine is well illustrated.

Some Good Sellers.

D. Appleton & Co. report that since the publication of Mrs. Elinor Macartney Lane's "Nancy Stair" in June, the novel has already been out of print three times, and the orders just received will nearly exhaust the new edition in preparation. Mrs. Lane will be remembered by her "Mills of God," but it is declared that the new book has outdone the first one. The Robert Burns incident and the rhyming match between him and the heroine have perhaps been the most popular incidents in the story.

Doubleday, Page & Co. have published a new edition of Simeon Ford's book, "A Few Remarks," with added chapters and a frontispiece portrait of the author.

A. S. Barnes & Co. have just issued another edition of Prof. Shaler's "The Citizen," the demand for which is said to be increased, owing to the coming Presidential election. The advance calls for Alfred Henry Lewis's forthcoming novel, "The President," which bears the imprint of the same publishers, may also partly be due to the general interest in things political.

Books in Demand.

The circulating department of the New York Public Library reports the following books most in demand during the week ended Sept. 1: Adult Fiction—Churchill's "The Crossing," Johnston's "Sir Mortimer," Sue's "Wandering Jew"; Juvenile Fiction—Mrs. Wiggin's "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Alcott's "Little Women," Baum's "New Wizard of Oz"; Miscellaneous—Spencer's "Autobiography," Rittner's "Impressions of Japan," Meyer's "General History."

Not the Same.

One of the Scotch [illegible] never pokes fun

editor of Harper's Bazar, and author of several well-known books, "Tales of Destiny," "Tales of the Cloister," &c., and Mrs. Kate Jordan Vermilye, author of "Time, the Comedian" and other clever stories and plays. Mrs. Vermilye and Miss Jordan are not related.

Mrs. Burnett vs. Rudyard Kipling.

What is regarded as a peculiar literary coincidence is the simultaneous appearance of Mrs. Burnett's story "In the Closed Room" and Kiplings "They." Both deal with the almost inexpressible mystery of childhood, touched by the real or imagined influences of the spirit world.

Dr. Frederic Rowland Marvin's Memories of Capt. William Parker Snow.

New York Times Book Review:

I HAVE often thought I should like to say a word or two in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW about a friend of my boyhood days whose daring adventures were known to the last generation, and whose books were read a half century ago. One of the most interesting men I ever knew was William Parker Snow, an English sea Captain and Arctic discoverer, who was for a time in charge of the mission yacht Allen Gardiner. In him were strangely mingled the spirit of wild adventure and the enthusiastic love of all that is beautiful in art and letters.

I came to know him when I was a child. He lived for about a year in a hut on the edge of a dense forest, far up on the hill upon the slope of which is builded the village of Nyack. My father was at the time pastor of the Reformed Church in that village, and I was a school boy living in my father's home, and preparing myself for college. Why Capt. Snow remained so long at Nyack, and why his dwelling was so primitive, I never knew; but his presence in the village for one whole year led to a close acquaintance and friendship that had marked influence upon my mental development.

It was during that year—I think it was 1867—he wrote his book, "Lee and His Generals"—not one of his best books, but still a work of no little merit. The Captain had seen the world. He had wintered amid the everlasting snows of the polar regions, and had penetrated into the dense jungles of tropical lands; he had lived with savages, and had fought with cannibals hand to hand for his life; and he had been shipwrecked upon unknown and inhospitable shores. His life was everything that appealed to the imagination of a youth naturally inclined to the romantic side of human experience and fond of books, with a great longing in his heart for travel and the world. And the Captain, pleased, I suppose, with the worship of a young man, and delighted with the opportunity of helpfully directing in some measure the effort and enthusiasm of an eager and inquiring mind, gave himself apparently without reserve to the gracious work of enlarging that youth's mental horizon, and stimulating within him a love for noble things. As I look back and remember the conceit and waywardness of my early days I am sure my good friend must have been a man of unusual patience and kindness of heart.

There came a time when the Captain's literary work in the little hut at Nyack was finished. Then he went his way. The youth grew to man's estate and became a minister of the Gospel in the Congregational Church, but never was there effaced from his mind the impression received from that one marvelous year of revelation.

Twenty years later, after a few months of rest and travel upon the Continent, I found myself in London. Passing Exeter Hall one morning, I stopped to read the bulletin board. There was the name of my old friend of whom I had heard nothing, save through notices of his books, for so long a time: "The Bishop of London will address this afternoon the Annual Meeting of the South American Missionary Society. Capt. W. Parker Snow will give an account of his life among savage peoples." It is needless to say that no time was lost in renewing the old acquaintance. I heard the Captain's address. It was the speech of a bluff, genuine English sailor, but it had in it the same reverence for both moral and artistic beauty. The voice was somewhat broken, but it had all the old enthusiasm and tenderness. Age had whitened his hair and wrinkled his brow, but had not in the least abated his courage. Yet time had brought to him a touch of sadness, for he missed the active and public life to which he had been so long accustomed; and he could not understand why the English Government was unwilling to trust him with a new command upon the sea. He was old, but did not know it. The last time I saw my friend it was at his home on Victoria Road, Bexley Heath, in Kent. All the afternoon we sat together in his library and talked of the early days and of the beautiful shores of the Hudson. He loved America and longed to return and visit it once more. When there was a pause in the conversation he took from a shelf the books he had written, and told me why and how he had written them. I remember that he patted the covers of his "Voyage of the Prince Albert in Search of Sir John Franklin"; it was a narrative of life in the Arctic seas, and its pages made him young again, as in the days when he endured the silence and solitude of the long Winter night in the frozen world of the far North. He handled with almost equal affection his "Two Years' Cruise off Terra del Fuego, the Falkland Islands and the Seaboard of Patagonia." He was not mistaken in thinking the book had some enduring qualities, for I have since seen a review of it in The London Athenaeum that gave it no small measure of praise.

His "Catalogue of the Arctic Collection in the British Museum," which made its appearance in 1858, did not seem to interest him; and I do not remember that he commented at all upon his "British Columbia Emigration," and his "Lee and His Generals," a copy of which lies before me, with a number of letters written by him to me after my return to the United States folded between the leaves. It was a delightful afternoon and the situation of his house was most attractive. From the library window we could look far over the fields to the distant hills. But I do not think he cared much for the landscape—his thoughts were with the sea.

A jug of ale and a loaf of dark bread, which he cut with a case knife, served for repast—it was better suited to his life and to our brief hour of fellowship than the most elaborate entertainment could have been. I knew we should never meet upon this earth again, but the thought, while it added tenderness to our

BOSTON NOTES.

Books by College Presidents; Some New Editions; a Few Juveniles.

THE American Unitarian Association has planned a series which, if well executed, will have an immense sale, if there be any reality in that interest in homely virtues alleged as the reason for reading "David Harum," "Eben Holden," "Uncle Terry," and similar stories. The series is to be called "True American Types," and will bring together biographies of men whose ways lay in the inconspicuous walks of life, their only remarkable trait being intense self-respect. The writers of these biographies will be authors sufficiently removed by circumstance from the "types" to be capable of seeing them in true perspective, but still in sympathy with them. For instance, the first volume will be "John Gilley," Maine farmer and fisherman, and the author will be the President of Harvard University, who knows the Maine coast and its people as well as he knows the American undergraduate.

***

President Jordan of Leland Stanford University is also publishing a book with the association, but it is an allegory, intended to show the wide divergence of the paths taken by various seekers after truth. It will be entitled "The Wandering Host," and will be bound as a gift book, with a decorative page border printed in green. Still another university luminary, the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, Case Professor of Manchester College, Oxford, has sent the association a little book called "Christianity and the Other Religions of the World," and to these announcements are added: "The Touch of Nature," some fifteen folk stories, retold by Mr. Augustus M. Lord; "A Book of Daily Strength," compiled by Miss V. D. Davis from the writings of Unitarian authors; "The Trinity and the Incarnation," by Mr. Richard A. Armstrong; "The Supremacy of Jesus," by the Rev. Dr. Joseph. Crooker, and "Pillars of the Temple," by the Rev. Dr. M. J. Savage.

***

The original six-volume edition of Dr. Channing's works, prepared under his own supervision, is to be reissued by the association this Autumn. If any of the original edition have been worn out it must have been by too assiduous reading, for their sober black cloth cover and unpretentious pages seem all but indestructible under ordinary usage. The Rev. James Martineau will be commemorated in a little volume of selections from his religious and devotional works. It is intended for pious uses, not for controversy, and will be edited by Dr. Martineau's friend, the Rev. Albert Lazenby.

***

The seven-volume Riverside Edition of Tennyson, to be published this month, will contain but few notes, not being intended for school use, and will be printed in new Caslon type, the text following the standard Cambridge edition. It is to have a photogravure portrait of the Laureate.

***

The "Cambridge" poet of this year will be Wordsworth. The text will follow the latest forms adopted by the author, and will give the poems in chronological order, with the dates of composition and of publication. It will also include that body of notes in which the poet revealed so much of his weaker side, and yet said nothing that any true lover of his can be sorry for having read. The volume is edited by Mr. A. J. George, the editor of The Prelude, and a devout Wordsworthian, who loves his poet none the less after years of giving his High School boys and college students instruction in his beauties.

***

"The Complete Poetical Works" of Mr. J. T. Trowbridge will appear in a Household Edition this month, the text being the same as that of the Library Edition, and a biographical sketch and portrait and other illustrations will be bound with the poems. In the closing pages of the book some later verses will be grouped under the title "Newly Gathered Leaves."

***

Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. have reissued Mr. Frederic Lawrence Knowles's "Golden Treasury of American Songs and Lyrics," with duogravure portraits of Lowell, Longfellow, Bryant, Holmes, Emerson, Whittier, Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Bunner, Dr. Van Dyke, Mr. Gilder, and Mrs. Spofford.

***

The new edition of Mrs. Annie Fellowes Johnston's "Joel, a Boy of Galilee," appears at the same time, and with it Mary Hazelton Wade's "Our Little Jewish Cousin," which describes the ways of a modern Jewish family living in Jerusalem. "Our Little Canadian Cousin," by Elizabeth Roberts Macdonald, is more like a story than any of the former volumes of the series, for not even by searching all the provinces for material can one find many differences between the British-Canadian and the American sufficiently marked to be visible to childish eyes.

***

Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. have prepared a new edition of Sarah Tytler's "Old Masters," giving it sixteen full-page pictures after famous paintings. The book is intended for students and lovers of art, and is one of a little group written by the author, who from 1848 to 1870 was joint proprietor of a girls' boarding school at Casper Fife. After some years devoted to literary work in London, she went to Oxford, and, as head of one of the boarding houses for students, keeps in touch both with literature and students, for whom she has written a number of books, all of which have been published in this country. Miss Tytler has also written a number of novels, but has returned to her former profession. She is Miss Henrietta Keddie to them, and, in spite of her seventy-seven years, they find her a sympathetic friend.

***

Philip Gilbert Hamerton's "The Intellectual Life" is also to appear in an illustrated edition, with half-tone portraits of Keats, Wordsworth, Shelley, Byron, the family at Abbotsford, and Napoleon, an etching of Leonardo da Vinci, and a portrait of Hamerton.

***

Miss Helen Leah Reed has not ceased to write, although there are to be no more "Brenda" books, and she has been preparing a story in which the chief characters are pupils in a public grammar school in a suburban town. The title is "Irma and Her Friends." For children even younger than those interested in grammar school girls Miss Caroline M. Fuller has written "The Alley Cat's Kitten." "Weejums," as the heroine is named, makes her first appearance in society in a Christmas stocking, wearing a paper ruff and having a pink candy elephant tied to her foot, and in this guise she may be seen in the current number of St. Nicholas.

***

Volumes of collected prayers are not novel, but they are not very common, and the age of the author and the place in which the prayers were offered gives a certain especial interest to "Dr. Hale's Prayers in the Senate," announced by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. Notes indicating the work of each day would make the book historically valuable; one might like to know from what sort of religious thought the Senate proceeded to certain action.

***

Of all school books Colburn's "Mental Arithmetic" seems to have the most vitality. It has outlived at least five generations of readers, geographies, and arithmetics, and now it is entering on a new lease of life in the South, having been adopted by the Virginia State Board of Education, which has also adopted "The Hiawatha Primer," "Literary Masterpieces," and "England's Story," and is certainly not behind the times in knowledge, for these are among the latest books adopted for school use in the North.

***

The Autumn Riverside Press editions will be "Boccaccio's Life of Dante," in the translation of the Rev. Philip Henry Wicksteed, the university extension lecturer on Dante; the translation of "The Georgics of Virgil," made by Mr. John William Mackail in 1889, and "Certaine Sonets" of Sir Philip Sidney, a quarto, an octavo, and a tall sextodecimo. The first is to be printed on a hand press from the Montaigne type, and it is to have broad margins, initials in red, and a new portrait of Dante, a woodcut after the death mask. Only 250 numbered copies will be sold, and the type will be distributed when the printing is completed. The Georgics and the "Sonets" will be printed in italic type, to be distributed as in the case of the former, of which 300 copies will be sold. Each book of the Georgics has a decorated heading printed in dull red, and the volume will also have decorative initials. The binding of all three books is to be "half" Italian vellum, with paper sides, and the "Certaine Sonets" will have the Sidneys' arms upon the covers. Headings have been given to those poems which lacked them, and they were not a few, for Astrophel and Stella did not need them; but the Elizabethan spelling and capitals have been followed, so that the volume is more English in appearance than the "Ronsard" and "Petrarch," which it resembles in many details.

***

The seventh and latest volume of the Red Letter Library, issued by Messrs. H. M. Caldwell & Co. by arrangement with the London firm of Messrs. Blackie & Son, is "An Eighteenth Century Anthology," with an introduction by the Poet Laureate, and all who find themselves in the least out of tune with the present time will enjoy it, inasmuch as it condemns the self-glorification of the nineteenth century and unkindly compares its vociferations of rebellion and signs of pessimism with the pious resignation of the eighteenth. Mr. Austin quotes many critics in confirmation of his eulogy of Pope, but unaccountably forgets John Wilson, although Kit North never wielded the cudgel more vallantly than when he was defending the thesis that Pope was the greatest poet of his time. The authors to whom some of the coming volumes will be dedicated are Thackeray, De Quincey, Keble, Lamb, Thomas à Kempis, Emerson, Carlyle, Holmes, St. Augustine, Cowper, and Herrick. Mrs. Meynell will write almost half of the introductions. The Archbishop of Armagh, Canon Beeching, Mr. Birrell, Mr. Frederic Harrison, Mr. Meredith, and Mr. Whibley are among the other writers. The volumes are bound in red, with rubricated title pages, and a headline in vermilion and specially designed end papers and frontispiece borders by Mr. Talwin Morris.

Doubtless it is books of this sort of which Boston should be thinking. In truth it is buying the "Foolish Dictionary" and the "Sequel" to The Real Diary of a Bad Boy.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, Sept. 9, 1904.

A French Grammar.

"Grammaire Française, with Exercises," by W. Mansfield Poole, instructor in French to the Channel Squadron, and Michel Becker, Professor of Modern Languages in the Ecole Alsacienne of Paris, has been written especially for the pupils who are being taught the new method—that is, of using the mother tongue as little as possible in the classroom. This book is for the use of the middle [illegible] dent has finished the initial stages and passed into the grammar, which at that time will hold the most important place. It contains everything essential for all except the highest school classes. The exercises in French to be translated into English refer constantly to the rules, in this way being made much clearer. (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 60 cents.)

Mystical and Humorous.

THE LOVES OF EDWY. Tale and Drawings by Rose Cecil O'Neill. 12mo. Pp. 432. Boston: The Lothrop Publishing Company. $1.50.

The germ of "The Loves of Edwy" was taken from Peter Ibbetson, but the story has been translated from the mystic to the Hibernian serio-comic. It is a tragedy done in a procession of jests. One should read it in that mellow state of sentiment, which lies between tears and laughter and induces, moreover, a sort of inversion of things by which you laugh at the weeping place and vice versa. The tale is of Aspasia Jane, introduced to the notice of the reader as a bit of dragon-tailed precocity, a little girl whose stockings will not stay up, who recites tragic passages under the direction of her father, a fine old Irish gentleman of the school of Thackeray's Costigan.

Aspasia Jane is one of a numerous and neglected brood. George is a little boy, also neglected, his father being a financier and his mother a butterfly. He haunts the house of Aspasia Jane, and pummels her little brothers. That is the beginning. Edwy is another boy, a silent, serious youth, an orphan, cousin to Georgie. He, too, haunts the house of Aspasia Jane. The story, which deals with this childish period, is pleasing, and informed with a sort of impish and fantastic truth to nature.

Then Aspasia Jane grows up, grows tall, goldenly beautiful, goes upon the stage, too, not for pride but for bread, and blushes ashamed in the chorus. And Georgie, returning from Paris and the airy study of art, finds her so, Edwy, likewise, coming up all of a rich bronze color out of South America, where he builds railways. Georgie, disliking his hereditary occupation of financier, takes to illustrating comic papers with pictures all eloquent of the "funny pity" which he finds in Aspasia Jane. Then, and always out of a generous impulse and in a spirit of jest as to the act itself, Georgie steals a diamond from his mother (who doesn't mind) and forges his father's name to check. At the second offense of the second kind the stern parent sends his hopeful son to prison as he would any other malefactor. So runs the tragedy. There is no positive evil in Georgie. It is merely excess of kindness and overbubbling levity. He does evil laughingly that good may come of it, and the harvest is desolation. Edwy is the "side-wind, blowing steadily one way, like the breath of destiny." Aspasia Jane, golden in hair and heart, is the inspiration of both, but may not save herself or them. She has passed, by the way, from the stage into literature. In the final wreck of things the author is relentless to leave sentiment not a leg to stand on.

Rochester to Michigan in 1841.

The account by Lansing B. Swan of a trip to Michigan from Rochester, N. Y., taken in 1841, ("Journal of a Trip to Michigan in 1841," by L. B. Swan. 32mo. Boards. Linen back. Pp. 53. Rochester: Printed for George P. Humphrey.) was written for his wife and father. It tells how the writer spent his time from June 9, 1841, until June 29 of the same year, and is full of interesting pictures of the country as it was over sixty years ago, of the hardships of travel by stage coach, steamship, and railroad; of the people he met, &c.

Lansing B. Swan was born at Onondaga Valley in 1809. He went to Rochester in 1830. He served as the first Alderman from the old Second Ward, and was a prominent business man until his death. He was closely identified with the city in a military way, having organized the old Rochester Union Grays, served for many years as its Captain, and later as Brigadier General of the militia from Utica to Buffalo. In 1880 he made a sea trip from New York to Nassau and Havana, hastening home from there to offer his services to his country at the outbreak of the civil war. But he died in December, 1861. He describes, as follows, the country between Ann Arbor and Kalamazoo:

Passed through the most beautiful country I ever saw, the ground all along the road richly ornamented with wild flowers and dotted with crimson by the thousands of strawberries, which cover it everywhere, the road being entirely natural. Our driver with his post coach drives in the road or woods as he fancied is fact, you may ride through this country anywhere, through the forest with horses and carriage. We passed today a great number of natural meadows of hundreds of acres, never cultivated in the least. All that the farmer has to do is, when the grass is ready, send out his men and mow it down. This is called in distinction from cultivated hay, "wild hay," and the other "tame hay."

The Advice of a Baby.

"The Autobiography of a Baby," (By Thomas L. Bradford, M. D., 16mo., Pp. 80. Philadelphia, Penn.: The Bell Publishing Company. 50 cents,) is by no means an infringement upon Mrs. Daskam Bacon's territory. This particular baby, a cherub in dainty overalls, as shown in the frontispiece portrait of him, writes with the wisdom of four years, and while the ills of babyhood are still fresh in his memory. He discourses eloquently upon the cruelties of a heartless world, where nurses and doctors, yea, and even fond mothers, are banded together against the comfort of the helpless and innocent little victims of their misdirected attention. [illegible] parties [illegible] papers [illegible] of the many heavy draperies bristling with so-called safety pins, recommends a certain little princess garment which he describes, goes on to discuss food and its quality, and gives recipes and other helpful suggestions. On the whole he is a knowing baby. "I do not always play. I often think deeply," he says. "When you look at a baby, remember that baby thinks and understands, although politeness may prevent him from saying much." Whereupon this champion of abused infants courteously blows a kiss to "all mothers of all other babies," and thereafter takes his leave.

"Rena's Experiment."

Mary J. Holmes's latest story is based upon the legend of a quaint old well into the depth of which, long years ago, a beautiful girl once looked, holding up a mirror as the clock struck noon, in the hopes of seeing the face of the man she loved. For tradition said that the face which would be revealed in the glass was the face of the future husband. But poor little Nannie saw the face of another than the man she loved—a kind-hearted Scotch lad—and the next day they found her dead in the bottom of the old well. And the Scotch lad was true to her, although the man she loved forgot her soon after. Although the Scotch lad married twice, he chose two widows who never grew jealous of his persistent devotion to the dead Nannie. It was when old Sandy McPherson grew old and for a second time became a widower that he conceived the complicated idea of bequeathing his vast fortune to the descendants of his two wives—a young man, Reginald Travers, on the one hand, and on the other a young woman, Irene Burdick, herself a relative of the original Nannie, on condition that they loved and married each other. In the event of their not loving and marrying, there were various restrictions binding the money.

As the two had never met, it was a very simple matter, therefore, for Rena to secure the co-operation of her cousin, another Irene Burdick, tall and blonde, with a coronet of braids (not all her own) on her queenly head, to masquerade as the Irene of the will, while she as a "poor relation" looked on and watched Reginald Travers fall in love as per instructions.

And with this as the main theme the story is worked out in a truly Mary-J.-Holmesque style. One needs must grow fond of Rena's tender, kittenish ways and resent the haughty manner of the other Irene. Of course, Nannie's as well figures frequently, and there is, at the critical moment, when the entanglement reaches its height, a providential death. Also an attack of fever clears the atmosphere of all impostures, restores peace, and brings on a smiling climax, with proper punishment for the false Irene, who, although seemingly only trying to help Rena to have a little harmless fun, at heart herself had base matrimonial schemes.

"Rare," Not "Scarce."

New York Times Book Review:

I have the greatest sympathy for the editor who is obliged to accept, and print, an answer to each of the many and varied questions which a curious public may find it convenient to ask—whether that answer is written in accurate English or otherwise.

I feel quite sure, however, that it is not sympathy which I feel for the one in your office who made me speak of Mr. Woodberry's "North Shore Watch" as that "scarce" piece of elegiac verse, instead of that "rare" piece, &c.

I am fully aware that in some instances the words are interchangeable. I say of a diamond, it is scarce, (or rare,) when few of its kind are obtainable, at any price. When few diamonds of equal value with the one I hold are obtainable I say "it is a rare diamond," not a scarce one.

In this latter sense I applied the word "rare" to the poem in question, which is, I believe, much read and widely disseminated.

The point is a tiny one and not likely to be observed by any one except the person who made the inquiry. It could not escape my own observation, hence my apology to the big round world of indifferents, and to the honest inquirer, even if he be puzzled to know what I am talking about. It increases my self-respect.

I wish to thank you for the courtesy of last week's space in your columns. I am greatly interested and much helped by each issue of THE BOOK REVIEW. I regard it as truly "rare."

Mosaic Law and Lore.

In The Hebrew Union College Annual, published at the college in Cincinnati, are contributions by eminent Jews as well as by members of the Faculty and the students. Prof. William Backer of the Theological Seminary of Budapest, Hungary, writes on the Gemara, a synonym of the Talmud, explaining the meaning of the word and its derivation. "The Jewish Minister" is the title of an essay by Claude G. Montefiore, editor of The Jewish Quarterly Review of London. Gustav Karpeles, editor of the Allgemeine Zeitung des Judenthums, Berlin, writes in German about Heinrich Heine and Ludwig Börne, both of whom were born Jews. "The Church and the Individual" is the theme of Dr. Max Margolis of the University of California. "In What Does the Originality of Judaism Consist?" is told by the noted Chicago rabbi Emil Hirsch. The new President, Dr. Kohler, writes on "The Four Ells of the Halakah, and the Requirements of a Modern Jewish Theological School"; the Halakah is the rule of conduct fixed forever by the ancient Jewish teachers. An important part of the book is the 150 pages of memorable dates of Jewish history, with its index, unfortunately the only one in the book. There are also portraits of the Faculty and of the graduates of 1904, with brief [illegible]

CURRENT COMMENT.

Views of Experts Here and Abroad on Matters of Interest in the World of Books.

PLOTS IN SHORT STORIES.—Aldrich, Stockton, and Bunner have given us excellent examples of the novella; but the best plots are used up, not adapted to squeamish tastes, or serving a new purpose. Writers are busy, too, with simple tales of character, or of event without particular ingenuity of plot. Good stories, like those of Irving, of Tieck, of Scott, belonged in this class; and thousands of stories in our newspapers and hundreds in our magazines (most of them poor) belong there to-day. But these are not typical short stories. Examine them—they seem old-fashioned now and are easily distinguished. Each one will be found to be based either upon a series of events interesting in themselves, or upon a series of events interesting because they bring out a character or characters. The interest in a contrast between two characters, or in the relation between a man and the circumstances in which he is placed—the interest, in a word, in situation—is rare in these tales, is rarely if ever the motive behind the story.

In the short narrative of to-day it is most common; in the typical short story it is prevailing. It was not the situation that interested the author of "Ruth," it was the simple love story; and he tells it with his eye upon the sequence of events. It was not the love story which most interested Kipling in "The Brushwood Boy"; it was the strange situation between lovers who knew each other only in dreams, and for that situation, not for their love and marriage, he works out the story. The greater number of the most famous short story writers of the nineteenth century show by their stories that it was a situation which usually inspired them. Indeed, a glance through the pages of Kipling, Maupassant, Harte, James will perhaps be enough to show that interest in situation is typical of the characteristic short story.

A situation may be recorded by a simple series of events arranged with the plot alone in view; but, since this situation itself is a result and not a process, such an incremental method must be crude. The writer of the short story is impressed by the situation, as Hawthorne so often was, and it is most natural that he should attempt to convey the impression he has received by making it the effect of his story. Theoretically, this is the logical method. A study of modern short stories shows that it is the practical one. In most of them the plot is interesting, but the total effect, as in Stevenson's "A Lodging for the Night," is after all the impression of a certain situation. Consider for an instant "Youth," a story recently published by Mr. Joseph Conrad. This is the narrative of a youth who from boyhood has longed to see the East, the wonderful mystic East. He is in his first responsible position—mate of the Judea, bound for Bangkok. The ship is fated. Storms unfit her. She returns to port again and again, yet always his desire for the East and the romance of his going there sustain him. On the high seas at last, she crawls through the tropics. Months pass by, yet his eagerness suffers no abatement. But the ship is doomed. The cargo of coal ignites. They fight the smoke day after day. The flames burst forth. At last they desert the ship, and somewhere off Java take to the boats. At night they enter a dim harbor, tie at a wharf, and fall asleep at the thwarts. The youth awakes at daylight. A row of faces, brown and yellow, are staring at him "without a murmur, without a sigh, without a movement." Behind them, brown roofs of hidden houses peeped "through the big leaves that hung shining and still." And "this was the East of the ancient navigators, so old, so mysterious." His ship is gone, and his plight is desperate; but he has attained the desire of his youth.

When the plot of this story is stated after the manner of "The Decameron," it is merely this: A youth desires to go to a certain place, and after many delays gets there. In short, it is scarcely a plot at all; it has no distinct point, and it is of importance only in so far as it serves a purpose that is something more than to make the story move for the sake of the narrative. The writer has conceived, not a story, but a situation. The aim of his narrative is to create in his reader's mind a vivid impression of the desire of a boy for the wonders of the unknown East; and it does so with complete success. And this story is only a striking example of what may be found to a greater or less degree in dozens of stories by Poe, Hawthorne, Stevenson, Kipling, Maupassant, Coppée, Verga, Tourgenieff, and other writers of our period. If you analyze "The Cask of Amontillado," "The Fall of the House of Usher," "The White Old Maid," "Markheim," "Little Tobrah," "La Peur," "Un Lâche," "Garassim," you will find that the author has a situation in mind, and is endeavoring to convey it to you; that the stress of the struggle for narrative interest is at least subordinate; and that all the elements of the story are nicely calculated to produce the proper impression. In some of Bret Harte's stories the plot is absolutely negligible; and this we should expect of the French, whose tradition of short story writing has given them a handicap in its development.

The conscious purpose to convey an impression is not implied by Prof. Matthews's formula, which defines the short story by a certain unity of impression. "Rip Van Winkle" would be explained and classified by such a definition, because the simplicity and restraint of its form produce a single impression of narrative unity. A single impression of narrative unity belongs also to "Youth"; but this story has what "Rip" has not, a conscious attempt to convey an impression of a situation which is the nucleus of the story. In "Rip Van Winkle," Irving is interested to some extent in situation, but much more in the series of events. And if one should rewrite "Rip Van Winkle," intending to convey an impression of the pathos of Rip's situation alone among strangers, a very different story would be the result. The story that has unity, restriction, and therefore a single effect, is not the same as the story with unity, restriction, and an attempt to convey an impression of a situation, although the term "short story" is used fitly to cover both. Such a purpose in story writing makes unity and singleness of effect inevitable. In the old tales, these were attained because the incident treated of was single; or if there were a number of episodes, the narrative pointed to a speedy conclusion and could be brought into a small compass. In the best of the modern short stories, the writer (to repeat) has conceived not a story but a situation, and employs his narrative merely to impress this upon the reader. Therefore, be the story of one episode, like "A Coward," or, like "Without Benefit of Clergy," of many, of well-jointed plot, or of none at all, the impression must be unified, vivid, and distinct from that given by the novel.—Henry Seidl Canby in The Dial, (Chicago.)

EXPERIENCE AND INSIGHT IN FICTION.—In the letter printed in last week's issue Mr. Isidore G. Ascher raised a "curiously suggestive" point. Does the average writer of fiction overwrite himself—or herself—thus falling into a routine of dreary iteration? As Mr. Ascher points out, "only intellectual giants have that supreme imagination capable of delineating the endless character, the diversified aspects of humanity, the multiform workings of the human heart; the lesser minds soon exhaust themselves; the fount becomes arid." But I think a point is missed—imagination in a writer of fiction is dependent upon insight and experience. Take a specific example: Thackeray had the gift of insight, and he saw much of life; hence his greatness. Imagination pure and simple leads to the writing of fairy tales, and many of the novels of to-day are mere fairy tales, entirely lacking all insight into and experience of human life. Even if the experience be there, it is discounted by the want of insight. It might almost be taken as an axiom that a novelist should only write of life that has come under his actual observation; second-hand knowledge of life is worth little or worthless. Dickens failed to write of Paris life as he did successfully write of London, for the former city he only knew superficially, the latter intimately. Perhaps most of the great characters in fiction are idealized or composite portraits of living or dead originals. Writers not in the first rank sit down to draw life and nature from their inner consciousness; great writers from an amalgam of insight and experience, heightened by imagination. And here imagination resolves itself into the ability to "put yourself in his place."

The above reflections have, of course, oft before been made, and many times better expressed; but the repetition of well-worn truths is more desirable than the manufacture of modern paradoxes—pace Messrs. Chesterton & Co. After all, who can say anything new? Can a writer hope to do more than to send forth old wine in new bottles, not new lamps for old? No parrot cry has wrought more hurt than that for "originality." "Give us something new"; and writers injure themselves and their readers in straining after novelty instead of confining themselves to nature and her ways, which are not new, though ever fresh.

As to the repetition of "favorite thoughts in other verbal garb" by writers of genius, alluded to in Mr. Ascher's letter, does it greatly matter? Of course it would be better if our writers would say their say in their best manner once and for all, though even so we should lose this—that the very repetition does show us what are an author's "favorite" thoughts, and therefore throws a light upon the author's character. Had Shakespeare again and again given us the same thought in different garb we should have known what he himself thought upon it at any rate one point. Again, a writer, however great, is but human, and so open to error; it is one of the calamities of criticism that a man of genius is often counted as unable to err—is set upon a pedestal as a god. Much absurd commentary would have been spared us had critics remembered that even Homer can nod.—London Academy.

LIBERTY AND THE POETS.—The second volume of the collected edition of Mr. Swinburne's poems contains the flower of his poetry, which was inspired by the old passion of liberty, by the old ecstasy of freedom, by the old rapture of republicanism. The spirit of the hour has changed since the heyday of Victor Hugo and Mazzini—we say the spirit of the hour, for it would be absurd to call it the spirit of the age—and the world is now in one of those streams of reaction which disturb the main current of civilization. Liberty is no longer a war cry or even a shibboleth. Freedom is a shadow of a shadow. The cult of nationalism has been submerged in the cult of imperialism. There is more pity than sympathy for the weak races, and there is more reverence than rancor for the strong. Force is the fashionable god, and force in alliance with practice is the highest ideal of the great nations. Utilitarian ambitions have swept aside the misty ideals of cosmopolitanism and universal brotherhood. Nations fight for markets rather than for holy places. In the stress of the struggle for supremacy in commerce and manufactures men have forgotten the less urgent problems of internal government. The merchants, indeed, has saved the monarch. The real rulers of the modern State are not the King, the Emperor, and the Czar, but the financier, the trader, the trust, the syndicate, and the corporation. The centre of gravity has shifted, and the consequence is that the lyrical outbursts of the republican era seem strangely remote. The modern nations do not ask, "Are we free?" but "Are we prosperous?"

It may seem that this alteration in the centre of gravity is for good, and that the industrial age may be ethically as well as actually an age of gold. But it is possible that the lust of commerce may work as much woe in the world as the lust of liberty, and that the commercial wars of the new Kings may cost humanity as large a toll of life and peace as the dynastic wars of the old. However that may be, one thing seems clear—poetry will find in the new ideals no such inspiration as she found in the old. There will be no Swinburne to chant the glory of Pittsburg rails or New Zealand mutton, the splendors of the tinplate trade and the cement industry, the majesty of Canadian corn and the wonder of Australian wool. And we fear that political changes will [illegible] so they [illegible] who will sing "The Rise of Woolsack" or "The Rise of Devonshire." In fine, the world, from the point of view of the poetic artist, seems to be growing prosaic; his only resource now seems to be the shaping of the new marvels of science. Perhaps, indeed, the great poet of the future will sing to us of monads and electrons. Ignoring the passions of men, he may chronicle the passions of sub-electrons in their solar system, the atom—weaving out of their attractions and repulsions a new form of dramatic art. Erasmus Darwin descanted upon the "Loves of the Plants." The bard of the new day may croon the "Loves of the Electrons."

But it would be a mistake to suppose that the permanence of poetry depends upon the permanence of the convention which inspired it. The Miltonic convention has passed away, but Milton and his poetry remain. And although to this generation the very name of liberty sounds archaic, yet these poems in her praise stir the blood, for they tingle with a generous passion, a noble magnanimity, and a heroic ardor which produce in the mind the excitement of pure literature. It may seem inadequate to describe the effect of literature in such terms, but the point is worth making. For good literature makes life more intense, more rapid, more eager. It raises the vital force to a higher pitch. It infects us with an ardor which is higher than ourselves, and makes us for the time beings of a larger energy and a finer glow. And this magical capacity of communicating noble emotion is the distinguishing characteristic of Mr. Swinburne's poetry. He is the most potent of spiritual incendiaries.—London Athenæum.

TREVELYAN'S "AMERICAN REVOLUTION."—It is the uncommon fortune of Sir George Trevelyan to write delightfully as well as convincingly in his story of our Revolution. Even where he convinces us least he does not delight us least, for nothing could be more charming than his study of the colonial conditions from which our National conditions rose. As we read the passages which portray the life of the New England farmer at the time he began to come under the observation of the European visitor, especially the philosophical visitor of French race and prepossessions, we held our breath a little in fear that the picture, frankly shown us at second hand, might be a vignette from some pretty eighteenth century moral tale. We sighed for the difference which the traveler would find in the same region at our later day, but our courage returned with the perception that the historian's good-will did not carry him beyond a reasonable indulgence of our Colonial virtues and advantages from the vignette. When it came to the study of specific character, of characteristics, the doubt which we seemed to incur was altogether past. The man of the Revolutionary period might have been too fondly seen as a type, but the men of that time were discerned with an eye whose report of them gave us the sense of ourselves seeing them for the first time, of seeing them alive. There is no affectation or pretense of discovery in our author's method. His Washington, Franklin, Adams, Arnold, Montgomery, Putnam, Lee, are fit outline the men we have always known, and yet somehow we have not known them in such actuality before, in such measure of the modernity which resides in the important persons of every time. Where they were provisional, and destined to be outdated by events and conditions, they are as truly shown as where they were permanently great, and destined to outdate events and conditions. Putnam is an instance of the excellence of this portraiture in one kind, and Franklin as well as Adams in another; the analysis of the heroic elements in Arnold and the foreshadowing of their tragical precipitation is something most uncommon; for it is the defect of history ordinarily to read men's characters backward, and to judge their whole past by what they eventually did.

If such an English history of the American Revolution could be epitomized for use in schools, so as to present not only the facts, but the feelings of the time—to embody the author's parallel view—we can imagine nothing which would do more to disabuse the forever rising generation of the belief that it was the English people who were warring upon the American people in that struggle, or more to imbue those to whom the future belongs with the fraternal sentiment at present more evident in England than in America.—William Dean Howells in Harper's Magazine.

AUTHORS, BOOKS, AND MAGAZINES.—In an experience of more than forty years in association with a publishing house, I have never known of any meddling on their part with the business, except in rare cases after the fact.

I have always understood that the publishers who issued "Jane Eyre" and "Adam Bede" did so without any previous consultation with matrons or any thought of them, leaving them to talk it over afterward with the same fearless freedom. I never knew a publisher to reject a novel that was on its literary and dramatic merits worth publishing, except when it was indecent or was likely to have an actually immoral influence—the kind of thing which would have been as unpleasant reading to himself as to any reader, even a matron. "Trilby" was published not only as a book but as a magazine serial. It was not immoral, but it was unmoral—as unmoral as childhood is. Two or three matrons wrote protesting letters, but most of the few complaints made came from men. Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" was published serially in Harper's Bazar, and his "Jude the Obscure" (under another title) in Harper's Magazine. If publishers of books and magazines err in this matter, it is likely to be on the side of daring, not from adventurous intention but in unconscious innocence. They are not afraid to confront Truth—even with a capital T.

Indeed, it is this very truth, with all the candor and splendor that attend it and all its inherent majesty, that the best literature of to-day in books and magazines confronts without tremor. This is as true of our literature as of our science. It is a direct and intimate attitude, and we frankly credit the West with having helped us to it. But it is the trait of our time, as well in the East as in the West, however we may have come by it. It indicates a distinct advance in our culture, which in literature brings us ever more and more face to face with the essential truths of life, just as in science it insists upon the closest scrutiny of physical phenomena. The supreme interest of the greatest fiction of our time is in its psychical interpretations and disclosures. This interest excludes no really vital theme, but only that false and shallow and even meretricious masquerade of human passions and sentiments which vitiated the fiction of a former age, and which no cultivated reader now tolerates. Even Zola is pathologically true, and has his proper place in the respect of readers who seek that kind of truth. In English and American fiction the writers who have developed the psychical method—among whom Henry James stands both as the type and as first in the exemplification of the type—have kept within the limits of a normal exposition. The good and evil are inseparably mingled in our human life—our chief wonder being, as Mrs. Deland has said, the badness of people who are called good and the goodness of those who are called bad—so that the shadows have their place in the brightest picture, and they are not to be evaded by any shuffling. We willingly follow where the path inevitably leads—to see life as it is.

I do not say that everything which could be published with propriety in a book could fitly be published in a magazine. The purchaser chooses his book; the magazine goes to an audience to which it is committed by a pledge, in part explicit, but for the most part a matter of implicit understanding. But the limitation does not arise from an embarrassing moral constraint. That is scarcely felt; the editor is not consciously aware of it; his resistance is against weak, unworthy stuff. There are doubtless authors who revel in brutalities, who enjoy an infernal habitation not for its purgatorial fires but for its sulphurous airs, and who complain because they may not make their descents before a polite audience; but these things do not come within the scope of the demand of any species of human culture.

Every magazine, in the course of its development establishes an expectation as to the field it will occupy and the kind of themes it will treat. Hence arises its principal limitation. Fifty years ago a popular magazine intended for general circulation must have been educational in a sense that it need not be to-day. For a long time it must have treated themes now wholly relegated to special periodicals. One thing it never could have excluded—that is, the best current literature.

It is fortunate in the interests of a general culture and of literature especially that a great magazine to-day may have as its distinguishing limitation the exclusion of specialties, retaining only within its scope such scientific, historical, and descriptive articles as are novel disclosures in their several fields. It may even avoid all timely or occasional topics, so adequately treated by the daily and weekly press, thus devoting nearly its entire space to what is known as the literature of power.—Henry Mills Alden in North American Review.

HAZLITT.—For one who has found his profit in strolling up and down in Hazlitt's essays at odd hours for half a lifetime, it is little becoming to talk overmuch about the man's personal imperfections. It matters little to any of us now that his temper was bad; that his passions too often betrayed him into folly; that his faculties lacked a certain balance; that his mal de rêverie, whether born with him or caught from his French master, sometimes ran too feverish a course; that, in short, he had the not unusual weaknesses of supersensitive men. What does matter is that at his best he wrote English prose as comparatively few have ever written it, and in doing so said a world of bright and memorable things that no one else could have said so well, even if it had ever occurred to any one else to say them at all. If he was difficult to live with that is a question more than seventy years out of date; and no competent reader ever brought a similar accusation against his essays. It has been said of them more than once, to be sure, that they are not so good as Lamb's; but then, you may say that of all essays; and really the comparison is futile, not to call it foolish. The men were nothing alike; though even so, we may gladly agree with Mr. Henley's comment, that, as "dissimilars" they "go gallantly and naturally together—par nobile fratrum."

Perhaps Hazlitt sometimes wrote too much in haste, with hardly sufficient care for those minute excellences that go to the making of perfection, though he could talk edifyingly under that head, and appears to have been the author of the clever parody, more clever than true—as cleverness is apt to be—

Learn to write slow; all other graces
Will follow in their proper places;

and it may be, as one of the cleverest of his admirers assures us, that he was "really too witty." Concerning points so nice as these, it is hard for "honest and painful men" to feel certain. Haste has the compensatory virtue of generating heat, while as for the having too much wit, it is like having too much money, or more than one's share of personal beauty; serious misfortunes, both of them, beyond a doubt, (every one says so,) but misfortunes to be put up with, at a pinch, in a spirit of Christian resignation. All things considered, too much is perhaps better than too little, and, for better or worse, excess on both sides of the line is Maurice Hazlitt's "note." If the virtues, of courage and obstinacy he possessed enough for two. We applaud, even while we pity, to see how, all his life long, he stood up for what he believed to be the truth, in spite of the frowns, and worse than frowns, of all who in that day had it in their power to blast the career of men in his profession. He was defamed and abused, for political reasons—all for that unlucky Bonapartean bee in his bonnet—as few men of letters have ever been, and to the last he did not haul down his flag. * * * To do one's main stint well is probably as much as most of us can reasonably hope for; and so much, assuredly, Hazlitt did; for his main work, as we see it, was the writing of his few volumes of critical and miscellaneous essays. Into those he put the breath of long life. These are what count, seventy years after. Whoever begins with them, returns to them. Not one of them but comes under Lamb's heading of "take-downable."

As a matter of course, however, being a man of active mind and having his living to make by his pen, he wrote many things besides these. He began, indeed, with a metaphysical treatise—a child of his youth (he believed it a great discovery) for which he never ceased to cherish an excusable fondness. This, on the authority of those who have read it or have talked with some who have done so, we take to be a rather difficult and innutritious choke-pear, something to be safely left alone by ordinary seekers after knowledge. Then, toward the end of his career he produced a four-volume life of Napoleon which, on equally good authority, we should think to have been a kind of anticipation or foreshadowing of the modern "novel with a purpose." His latest editors go so far as to leave it out of their fine twelve-volume edition of his works. Somewhere between these two attempts at immortality he indulged himself in a book on grammar, intended especially to correct the errors of Lindley Murray, more particularly, we believe, his faulty definition of a noun as the name of an object. Fortunately or otherwise, this work (every author of consequence has at least one such) never got beyond the original (manuscript) edition. The making of it seems a queer freak for a man of Hazlitt's turn of mind; but then, as Mr. Birrell observes, "grammar has its fascinations, and even such men as John Milton and John Wesley, no less than William Cobbett and William Hazlitt, succumbed to its charm."—Bradford Torrey in The Atlantic Monthly.

IS THIS A TRUE STORY OF LOWELL?—Sitting here under the beeches I forget the gray Scotch firs standing so forlornly dumb, and begin to remember a curious story the poet and historian Lowell used to tell of a "witch farm" in America. The place is a forest near New York, at some distance, but within a walk from the city. On the edge of the forest a farm will at times appear, which no one remembers to have ever seen before, unless he happens to be among the few who have seen. There is no one about the farm, no sound is heard, yet there are signs of busy occupation. The door is open, empty milk pails lean against the wall, newly cleaned pans and dairy utensils and butter churns are set out to dry; clothes hang on the line in a little drying ground—all looks as if the farmer's wife, or servant, had but just gone indoors; or gone out meaning to return in a few minutes. Whoever thus chances on the farm seldom stops long to look. He will pass on, thinking to himself: "I don't seem to remember that farm. I must inquire about it in town." In town not a soul knows anything about it, and never will that person see the farm again, however often he may return to look for it. Then others will go out to seek the witch farm. Over and over again will they pass and repass the very spot where it had been seen, retracing their steps, and puzzling and saying: "It must be there; we have mistaken the way." They are few indeed to whom the spectral farm has shown itself. Lowell himself once saw it. On the verge of the wood he passed a homestead which appeared precisely as had been described—the milking pails and dairy things all about round the open door, the linen hanging out to dry on the clothesline. Mr. Lowell saw it all, and passed on without thinking; then suddenly stopped short with a feeling of something strange, turned and sauntered slowly back in order to look again at the place. But no house at all was there, and he was unable to find again the exact spot where it had been. He had seen the witch farm.—Cornhill Magazine.

LAMB AND THE ELIZABETHAN DRAMATISTS.—The fourth volume of Mr. Lucas's edition of Lamb, containing the "Specimens of English Dramatic Poets" and the extracts from the Garrick plays, is a model of careful, sympathetic, and widely informed editing. In the headings to the extracts Mr. Lucas supplements and corrects Lamb's often imperfect information as to the authors from whom he quoted; while the notes contain the history of the "Specimens" and illustrate their influence upon subsequent criticism. Mr. Swinburne's "Sonnets on English Dramatic Poets" are quoted in full, and many extracts are given from the same writer's prose amplifications of themes from his great master in Elizabethan lore. Mr. Lucas has rightly reckoned it no part of an editor's province to plunge into controversy as to the abiding value of Lamb's judgments. Nevertheless, he might perhaps have given some indication of the existence of a controversy which has been proceeding, in a desultory fashion, for several years past.

It would be difficult to cite another instance in the history of modern literature in which notes so brief as these marginalia of Lamb's have produced so far-reaching an effect. They do not, in their sum total, exceed the length of a magazine article; yet they contain more classic passages that have burned themselves into the memory of men than any other piece of dramatic criticism, save only the "Poetics" of Aristotle. They have dominated English opinion during a whole century. In the intensity of his intuitions, Lamb was beyond doubt one of the greatest of critics, and he had in a very high degree the gift of persuasion. But it is sometimes forgotten that he himself would have been the last to lay claim to dispassionate breadth of view, to scrupulous measure or proportion in appraisement. "I am," he said, "a bundle of prejudices—the veriest thrall to sympathies, apathies, antipathies." His dramatic criticism was the outcome of an intense congenital sympathy, reinforced by the zest of the treasure seeker. Accepted as final, when it was, in fact, merely tentative and personal, it has betrayed the critics—and, alas! the dramatic poets—of three generations into a good many absurdities.—William Archer in The London Daily Chronicle.

SOME OF THE "SATURDAY'S" FUN.—A curious phenomenon is observable in literature, art, music, and the drama, compelling the critics to deal largely with the politics of their respective subjects instead of with the subjects themselves as of old. Music, drama, art, seem to have got into wrong hands or into no hands at all. Literature appears to be in little better plight. There has unfortunately sprung up a race of half-educated busybodies bent on making their way, in the commercial sense, pretending to a knowledge of which they have nothing save at second-hand and cynically cheerful if their ignorance is exposed. We do not refer to such personages as Mr. Hall Caine, or A. Conan Doyle, or Mr. Clo[illegible] are achieved in the zones that lie outside literature. Nor have we anything to say about the Jeromes, Zangwills, Le Queux, and their compeers: they also stand outside the range of an article on literature. Rather we have to deal with the small groups of men—some of them young but most (though they are not aware of it) past middle age—who have persuaded themselves and each other that they are the lawful successors and literary heirs of Stevenson and Leslie Stephen. Whatever we may think of the judgments, opinions, and prejudices of these last, about one thing there can be no doubt: they had served a faithful apprenticeship to literature and they loved it for its own sake. They had "an honest regard for letters."

But of an honest regard for letters we find no trace in the work of these "poets to the trade," critics to the trade, and friendly critics of the poets. Brilliant young souls spend their days in cataloguing books or music in the British Museum or elsewhere and their evenings in penning panegyrics of the verse and prosy prose of their restaurant acquaintances; and this stuff is unloaded on the mighty British public as the verdict of the foremost men of letters of the day. The consequences are appalling. We do not mean that the public is always taken in, or that it would greatly matter if it was; we do mean that the victims of these eulogies generally come to take themselves with truly tragic seriousness. How far Mr. Stephen Phillips ought to be placed above Shakespeare to satisfy himself we do not know, nor do we pretend to judge as to the relative merits of Mr. Benjamin Swift's book on the universe and the complete works of Herbert Spencer. But the language used by their admirers leaves no doubt as to their views. And these gentry are neither the least ignorant and honest nor the most amusing of the groups who—Heaven help us!—pose as literary judges. There are others who are worse; there are others who, aiming higher, are perhaps not less harmful.—London Saturday Review.

DICKENS'S AMERICAN READINGS.—A single copy of this "Dickens" article still exists, buried in an old scrapbook of its author. And as giving a contemporaneous picture of the man and of his conception of his own characters it may be of some little interest at the end of all these years. As recorded at that time, his voice was low, husky, and monotonous. Sitting in the centre of the hall, I watched his face closely with a powerful opera-glass; and if I had not been perfectly familiar with his text I would hardly have understood him. Indeed, those who sat in the rear of the room had decided difficulty in distinguishing what he said. What is known as the "rising inflection" was marked, and very painfully marked, to American ears. The anticipation was very high. * * * I attended the entire series, enormously interested in the man and in the expression of his conceptions of his own works. I had devoured his stories; his people were mine own people, his characters were my intimate friends. I knew them, of course, by sight and by sound. I had walked with them, I had talked with them, I had laughed and I had cried with them, ever since I could read. I knew every turn of their thoughts, every expression of their faces, every tone of their voices, every incident of their lives. And lo! when Dickens himself presented them they were not my Toots, not my Ham Peggotty, not my Tiny Tim at all! But Dickens must know them better than his hearers did. For Dickens made them! Thanks to Dickens, they were all lost in the crowds at Steinway Hall. And they have never altogether been recovered.

This was the burden of the earliest printed work of the 'prentice hand. And it is not much worse than anything that has been attempted since. It was cruelly treated by proofreader and typesetter and editor, as represented in the single individual upon The Journal's staff; it was signed "Silas Wegg," no one knows why; and it attracted no attention whatever, even in Red Hook. Still it was a new and original view of a subject to which, at that period, columns of newspaper writing were devoted all over the country. No doubt thousands of listeners were affected in the same way; but nobody else seems to have taken it so much to heart. * * * His old men were all alike. His Scrooge, and Justice Stareleigh, and Daniel Peggotty, and even his juvenile Toots, were all the same in tone of voice, although the expression of their faces was different. His control of his facial organs was admirable; and this was the redeeming point in the entertainment. But his Squeers was Scrooge with one eye. His John Brodie was Emily's Uncle with a slightly different dialect. His Betty, the maid of Bob Sawyer's landlady, who, when wanted was always found to be asleep with her head glued to the kitchen table, was the best thing he did; and the intense stupidity of his expression when she opened the door for Mr. Pickwick I have never seen excelled upon the stage. Nevertheless Toots had the same expression, and said "No consequence" in almost the same tone of voice. My ideas of Toots were all upset. Toots, as I had always known him, Toots as he was portrayed by Tom Johnson and by Jefferson on the stage was gone, and gone forever. The Toots of Dickens was entirely different, indescribably different, and I cannot even now reconcile myself to the change. It was a revolution in a long-standing, almost intimate, acquaintance with Toots, which was very dreadful and not to be endured.

So it was with Micawber. Dickens's Micawber was not the stage Micawber of Burton or of John Brougham. Of course Dickens must have understood his own Toots and his own Micawber better than they did. But to have men whom one has known familiarly for years shown up before one in an entirely new light is a severe trial. The light may be the true light and the better light, but the old lights are to be preferred; and Toots and Micawber were never the same again. I always said he did not touch upon Miss Trotwood, or upon Mr. Dick, or upon Bunsby, or Cuttle, or upon rough and tough old Joey Bagstock, or upon Peckniff, or Noddy Boffin, or Sampson Brass, or Chadband, or Bucket. I could not have stood any more upheavals of old conceptions of good old friends. I was thankful, [illegible] with a we," was immaterial—The late Laurence Hutton's "The Literary Life" in The Critic.

BUSY ROBERTSON NICOLL.—I am amazed at the extraordinary versatility and boundless energy of Dr. Robertson Nicoll. Only the other day he was in London keenly interested in all the Autumn projects of a great publishing firm, arranging for a number of new volumes in a series of biographies that has been so successfully launched by him under the title of "Literary Lives." All the world knows him further as the editor of at least five publications—The British Weekly, The British Monthly, The Expositor, The Woman at Home and The Bookman. Now I find a report of more than two columns in The Aberdeen Free Press of a sermon preached in the United Free Church at Lumsden, Aberdeenshire, in which Dr. Nicoll treats of the situation that has arisen in Scotland owing to the recent decision of the House of Lords. At the Old Manse, Lumsden, Dr. Nicoll was born and brought up; it is here that his father was a minister. In a neighboring parish was another little lad destined to be well known in theological literature—Dr. Robertson Smith. Dr. Nicoll is the owner of the house at Lumsden in which he was born; he has considerably enlarged it, and there every year he spends his August holiday with his family.—C. K. S. in London Sphere.

TREASURES OF HAM HOUSE.—Very few old English houses have preserved so well the atmosphere and feeling of their prime as Ham House, the Earl of Dysart's seat near Richmond. It is having its history perpetuated as it deserved, in two handsome volumes. It was given to the first Earl by Charles I., and reached the meridian of its fame and lustre during the lifetime of Elizabeth Murray, the first Earl's daughter. Her second husband, the overreaching Lauderdale, made it the secret meeting place of himself and his friends, Clifford, Arlington, Buckingham, and Ashley; and thus the word "cabal," the famous acrostic which has passed into a political byword, might very well be written over the old house portals. But it is its artistic enrichments that make it famous, and not its political connections; and for these we must thank the memory of the Duchess, not the Duke.

The Van Dycks which the Duchess collected are in the entrance hall where she had them placed; the library begins with a dozen Caxtons and comes down no further than the copy of his "Henriade" which Voltaire sent the Duchess with a gallant compliment; the chapel boasts the Prayer Book which the "sainted" King gave to the Earl; and the miniature room is a storehouse of treasure for the art lover and historian. Dr. Williamson of the Print Room in the British Museum has made the miniature collection a special study, and the results are to be put as an appendix to the history of the house which Messrs. Bell are publishing. Mr. W. G. Fletcher, the well-known bibliophile, has written a chapter on the library; and the author of the book, Mrs. Charles Roundell, has put a store of research and enthusiasm into her history of the place and the Tollemache family. The work is to be issued as a sumptuous five-guinea folio, with many collotypes and photographs; and the edition de luxe on Japanese vellum is to cost 10 guineas.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Around a McKinley Button.

MCKINLEY CARNATIONS OF MEMORY. The McKinley Button of Two Campaigns. By Mrs. Angie Newman, Author of "Heathen at Home" "An Italian Winter," &c. Illustrated with Photographs. 12mo. Pp. 72. Published by the author.

Mrs. Newman has written a little book about a party of five persons traveling abroad during the first campaign for the election of Mr. McKinley as President of the United States. They wore McKinley buttons on the lapels of their traveling jackets. In London, in Paris, in Switzerland, Greece, Egypt, the ladies wore the buttons. In the last-named country the author presented one of the buttons to a hospitable Arab Sheik, whose harem she visited. On the button was printed the word "Protection," of which—treated in a mystical sense—Mrs. Newman has much to say. "Protection," she writes, "is the octave of power in its infancy"—and prints in capitals. Of reciprocity she says that it is the "final synonym of the altruism of nations."

Chiefly, the little book is a McKinley rhapsody, composed evidently with enthusiasm and strangely mingled with description of travel. At the end is an essay, "In Memoriam." The illustrations include photographs of McKinley and Mrs. McKinley, of the sphinx, of the pyramid of Cheops, of two women grinding corn in Palestine, of the Hall of Play at Monte Carlo, of the Corinthian Canal, of Honivard's dungeon at Chillon. The cover is decorated with white carnations and a reproduction of the button.

Electricity for Electricians.

MODERN PRACTICAL ELECTRICITY. Electricity in the Service of Man. A Popular and Practical Treatise on the Applications of Electricity in Modern Life. By R. Mullineux Walmsley, D. Sc. (London), F. R. S. E. Principal and Head of the Electrical Engineering Department of the Northampton Institute, London. With full-page plates and numerous illustrations. Vol. IV. Chicago: W. T. Keener & Co.

This final volume of Mr. Walmsley's elaborate work on electricity concludes a chapter begun in the previous volume, a chapter on the magnetic circuit, cells and alternators of various kinds (all copiously illustrated and diagramed). The next chapter is devoted to batteries for both continuous and alternate currents, and the third deals with continuous current motors, including tram car, or, in plain American, trolley car, motors with the familiar form of controller seen on the platforms of these most unceremoniously dangerous of all public vehicles. The next chapter deals with dynamos, the starting of the latter and the working of them. The final chapter is assigned to the subject of electrical measurements and measuring instruments, from simple galvanometer to the most elaborate machines for commercial purposes. Every part of the book is as copiously illustrated as the first chapter, and the explanations are designed for the use of practical users of electrical machinery, not for the mere illumination of the curious reader's dim notions of the subject. The various matters treated are, of course, duly and elaborately indexed, the mere index covering sixteen quarto pages of close print in double column. The list of illustrations covers five pages similarly printed.

Machinery and Machinists.

STORIES OF INVENTORS. The Adventures of Inventors and Engineers. True Incidents and Personal Experiences. By Russell Doubleday. Illustrated. 12mo. Pp. 220. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.25.

Beginning with the stories of Marconi and Santos-Dumont, Mr. Doubleday has not, however, confined his book to the immediate subject of inventors. He tells you how a fast train is run, how automobiles work—whether by steam, gasoline, or electricity; about very fast steamboats—the Arrow and certain turbine-propelled torpedo boats in the British Navy; about life savers and their apparatus, about the making and using of moving pictures, about bridge building, about submarine boats, about long-distance telephony, about typesetting machines, about the manufacture of ice. In the case of Marconi and in that of Santos-Dumont, "wireless" and dirigible balloons are, of course, described, but much of the interest lies in the personalities and persistencies of the two young men—both of whom set to work as boys upon the things which have made them famous. Marconi, by the way, is, it appears, the son of an Irishwoman. Like Santos-Dumont, whose story, so attractively told by himself, has been abridged by Mr. Doubleday here, Marconi did not have to grind for his living.

In the matter of the mechanics of automobiles very many people naturally will be interested, whether as prospective motorists or merely as pedestrians intent on keeping out of the track of the things. In a general way you may learn how several kinds of motors work, and exactly what it is which causes the car standing outside in the street just under your office window to make the irritating, futile sounding noises customary on such occasions. As for bridge building, that is always a fascinating subject, particularly when the bridges are away off in Africa or Asiatic or Andean wilds, and the engineer is king among awed aborigines. Doubtless, also, when you have watched the quivering yet wonderfully lifelike scenes thrown on a sheet by biographs and the like you have wondered how the effect was accomplished. Mr. Doubleday tells you. He tells you, again, how Mr. Holland runs his submarine torpedo boats, how Mr. Lake travels on the bottom of the sea in his submarine wrecking ship—a sort of sea tricycle. Altogether you get a surprising idea of what has been practically accomplished in submarine navigation. Then for telephone exchanges and what "central" does in order to give you XYZ Gramercy or any other number—to say nothing of Mergenthaler linotype machines and Lanston machines that set type letter by letter—all these things are more or less elucidated.

Dr. Minor's Lincoln.

THE REAL LINCOLN. From the Testimony of His Contemporaries. By Charles L. C. Minor, M. A., LL. D. Second edition, revised and enlarged. 12mo. Pp. 230. Richmond, Va.: The Everett Waddey Company.

The late Dr. Minor protested in his book against the "Lincoln Legend" as a growth more or less monstrous. Nobody, presumably, denies the existence of the legend, or the fact that it has tended at times to lose proper human proportions, but Dr. Minor would reduce to lower terms than most. He issued the first edition of his protest in 1901; just before his death he was at work on an enlargement of the earlier pamphlet—the result being the book before us, edited by his brother and sister. Dr. Minor was a native of Virginia, and an officer in the Confederate Army; later he was professor at the University of the South, President of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and a teacher at the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, and in Baltimore. In "The Real Lincoln" he has collated a great many written opinions of Northern men of standing adverse to the character or ability of the war President. It is well known that Mr. Lincoln, before the war and during the war, came in for liberal abuse. It is equally well known that many wise men and great on his own side of the fence did not always agree with him on matters of policy or methods of administration—Seward, Chase, Horace Greeley, even Gen. Grant. The assembling of many adverse remarks from such people, the quoting of the not always heroic facts made public by Lamon and Herndon, the marshaling of testimony to the effect that the Lincoln of 1861, and just out of the West, was not the assured figure of four years later—all these things may pain the lovers of legends, but they are not likely to affect the sober judgment of those whose admiration for Lincoln is based on things not legendary. Dr. Minor declared he had no such aim. He said there had been too much apotheosis, he felt that the other side should be painted. Painting only on the other side, and painting only in black, the total effect is marred by the absence of small streaks of white. Dr. Minor [illegible]

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

"S. W.," Bath, Me.: "In an account of the life of the Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, author of 'My country, 'tis of thee,' the following statement is made: 'The hymn "America" was the fruit of examining a number of music books and songs for German public schools, placed in my hands by Lowell Mason, Esq. Failing in with the tune of one of them, now called "America," and being pleased with its simple and easy movement, I glanced at the German words, and seeing that they were patriotic, instantly felt the impulse to write a patriotic hymn of my own to the same tune. Seizing a scrap of waste paper I put upon it, within half an hour, the verses substantially as they stand to-day.' According to this statement, the hymn originally contained only the four stanzas known to-day. I remember, however, seeing somewhere a version of the hymn which had five verses. Can you tell me anything about this extra and apparently suppressed stanza? When was the hymn first written, and where did it first appear?"

In a letter to a friend, Mr. H. P. Main of this city, Smith wrote: "As near as I can remember, 'America' was written Feb. 2, 1832, and first sung by the children on the Fourth of July of that year in Park Street Church, Boston." The hymn seems to have been first printed in book form (it may have previously appeared in some Boston paper) in the first edition of "The Choir," a collection of church music made by Lowell Mason, which was published some time during the latter part of 1832. The version given there contains five stanzas, the first of which is the suppressed verse to which our correspondent refers. It is as follows:

> No more shall tyrants here
> With haughty steps appear,
> And soldier bands;
> No more shall tyrants tread
> No more our blood be shed
> By allen hands.

The first, second, fourth, and fifth stanzas appear in this version as we all know them, and are signed "S. F. Smith." The second edition of "The Choir," published in 1833, gives four stanzas and omits the third, quoted above.

"A.," Buffalo, N. Y.: "When and where was T. B. Aldrich born?"

In Portsmouth, N. H., Nov. 11, 1836. Portsmouth figures in several of Aldrich's books under the thin veil of "Rivermouth." Here was laid the scene of most of his "Story of a Bad Boy," and his historical characteristics are described in his "An Old Town by the Sea."

HENRY LLEWELLYN WILLIAMS, Pearl River, N. Y.: "In answer to Charles H. Ward's inquiry as to the origin of 'so long,' you say that a recent English explanation of its origin was to the effect that it is a barrack-room corruption of 'salaam,' but this phrase is not used in the sense of farewell. As I once had 'the honor' (in Fleet Street) to 'belong to' The London Sporting Times, whose title, in slang, 'The Pink 'Un,' is more often used than the vernacular, to say nothing of journalistic experience making me rub elbows with military officers and theatrical worthies, I beg to say that, while 'salaam' is a greeting, its use, as 'so long' in English in certain circles, is as a farewell. I believe gentlemen returning from the East used the mal-pronunciation as in 'Hobson-Jobson' speech; but my friends of the variety business say it is of gipsy origin. The Zingari have introduced many Sanscrit terms—for instance, 'pal,' that is, 'pahli,' brother. I have heard that our crux is simply short for 'Don't let it be so long before I see you again'; but popular lingo is not often so elaborate in its source. I venture that 'so long' displaced the burlesque French 'au reservoir' in the early '70s."

E. P. SMILIE, Montpelier, Vt.: "Please tell me the value of the New England Primer, Boston, Fleet, 1799; also of editions of 1812 and 1844."

The earliest of the three editions is worth, in good condition, from $10 to $15; the other two are worth, respectively, about $5 and $2.

"ANGLER," New London, Conn.: "Can you give me any information about the Rev. G. W. Bethune, who edited an edition of 'The Complete Angler'? When did his edition appear, what was its popularity, standing, &c.?"

The Rev. George Washington Bethune, born in New York City in 1805, died in Florence, Italy, in 1862, was a Dutch Reformed clergyman of Brooklyn of considerable note as a preacher, the author of several works, including "Lays of Love and Faith," (a volume of verse;) "Orations and Discourses," &c., and an ardent fisherman, his love of angling leading him to publish an excellent edition of Walton's classic. The latter work first appeared in this city in 1847, and was frequently reprinted—in 1848, 1852, 1850, 1868, 1880, &c? The edition of 1880, published by Wiley, contained "some additions and corrections from the editor's own copy." It was later reprinted in cheaper form by Dodd, Mead & Co. Bethune's edition of "The Complete Angler" has always been highly regarded. Westwood wrote of it: "For the lover of angling books, and for the collector especially, there is no edition so useful as this. Nowhere else do we find united so complete a body of angling statistics and so large an accumulation of collateral data."

"M. C. C.," Pittsburg, Penn.: "Can you give me the name of the poem (and also that of the author) in which the following lines occur:

> "'A sigh too much and a kiss too long,
> And life is never the same again.'"

This poem, containing two stanzas, is by George Macdonald, and begins:

> Alas! how easily things go wrong.

A frequently quoted American version of the poem contained two additional stanzas, added by Lorettus S. Metcalf, founder and first editor of The Forum. This version was printed in The Bookbuyer, (now The Lamp,) October, 1898, Page 237.

NADINE RAYMOND, 2,245 Hearst Avenue, Berkeley, Cal.: "In Appeals to Readers of July 30 J. W. Graves, 421 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo., inquires regarding a book of children's stories published about twenty-five years ago, which contained the tales of 'Rumplestiltskin,' 'The Three Little Pigs,' 'Babes in the Wood,' &c. Another correspondent, Mrs. H. A. Van Alstyne, 225 Washington Avenue, Albany, N. Y., suggested that the book was by Mrs. Ciara Doty Bates and was called 'On the Tree Tops.' I think it was entitled 'On the Tree Top.' It contained a collection of the old stories dear to children's hearts—'The Three Bears,' 'The Sleeping Beauty,' 'Three Little Kittens,' and many others, as well as those mentioned by Mr. Graves. There were two editions of the book, and one was more complete than the other. It was published by a firm whose chief business was the issuing of children's books, the name, if I remember correctly, being McLaughlin Brothers."

"Q. A.," Haverhill, Mass.: "Please identify for me the following quotations, which I expected to find in Bartlett, but did not:

"'Love gilds the scene and women guide the plot.'

"'Here lies ——, reader, if male thou art,
Look to thy purse; if female, to thy heart.'

"The second quotation refers, I think, to some celebrated English highwayman."

The first quotation can be found in the epilogue to Sheridan's comedy of "The Rivals." The second quotation is the epitaph, in Covent Garden Church, on Claude Duval. It is given as follows in the second series of "The Law's Lumber Room," by Francis Watt. (John Lane, $1.50:)

Here lies Du Vall; reader, if male thou art,
Look to thy purse; if female, to thy heart.

"E. P.," University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va.: "The old poem of 'Darby and Joan,' which used to be found in school readers, has a line much resembling,

> "'Man works from sun to sun,
> Woman's work is never done,' whose origin is sought by 'G. H. T.,' New Bedford, Mass. The poem has these lines toward the end:

> "'When Darby saw the setting sun,
> He swung his scythe and home he run;
> "My work is done," I'll go to bed."'
> Joan replies at some length, ending with:
> "'But hapless woman ne'er may say
> "My work is done" till judgment day.'"

J. HOWARD, Long Branch, N. J.: "Which was Emerson's first book?"

The first writing by Emerson to appear in a book was "The Right Hand of Fellowship," which fills Pages 29-31 of an octavo pamphlet printed in Concord, Mass., in 1830, the greater portion of which is taken up with a sermon delivered at the ordination of Hersey Bradford Goodwin as colleague pastor with Ezra Ripley by James Kendall. The first pamphlet, (or "book," the terms, bibliographically considered, are interchangeable,) of which Emerson was the sole author was a "Letter to the Second Church and Society," (of Boston,) written on the occasion of his resigning his charge as pastor of that congregation, Dec. 22, 1832. This is an eight-page pamphlet, bearing the title quoted, and printed toward the end of 1832 in Boston by I. R. Butts. It was so rare that it was not in the Arnold library, sold in 1901, which contained the most extensive Emerson collection ever offered at auction; and it was unknown, (in 1897,) to P. K. Foley, compiler of "American Authors, 1795-1895," although Mr. Foley later became aware of its existence and described it in a letter printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW Sept. 17, 1898, when only one copy was believed to be extant. The next item admitted to Emerson collections is a sermon by Henry Ware, Jr., printed in Boston in 1833, which contains a hymn, "We love the venerable house," by Emerson. Then comes "A Historical Discourse Delivered before the Citizens of Concord 12th September, 1835, on the Second Continental Anniversary of the Incorporation of the Town," another octavo pamphlet, printed in Concord in 1835. This was the second publication of which Emerson was exclusively the author. "Nature," his first book of importance, appeared the following year, 1836.

"A. V. A.," Nyack, N. Y.: "I have a French poem which some one once said was the original of Charles Wolfe's 'Burial of Sir John Moore.' It is certainly either that or a translation of it. In the old English magazine where I found it years ago it was stated that this poem was discovered among the manuscripts of a French officer who had served in the East Indian wars. Can you furnish me with the facts in the case?"

This poem is one of the numerous poetical mystications of Francis Sylvester Mahony, the Irish priest, poet, and humorist, (1805-66,) who was better known as "Father Prout." Under the title of "Les Funérailles de Beaumanoir" it can be found in Mahony's "Father Prout's Reliques." Mahony printed it in Fraser's Magazine in 1832 in No. 10 of his "Prout Papers," "The Songs of France," with this introduction: "I subjoin an elegy on Colonel de Beaumanoir, killed in the defense of Pondicherry, when that last stronghold of French power in India was beleaguered by our forces under Coote. Beaumanoir belonged to an old family in Brittany, and had levied a regiment of his lieutenants and dependents to join the unfortunate Lally Tolendal, when he sailed for India in 1749; one of his retainers must have been the author of the following lines descriptive of his hasty burial in the north bastion of the fortress where he fell. Nor is it necessary to add any translation of mine, the Rev. Mr. Wolfe having reproduced them on the occasion of Sir John Moore's falling at Corunna under similar circumstances."

"E. L. F.," Felsenthal, Ark.: "The poem entitled 'The Old Man's Funeral,' concerning which M. Roosevelt Johnson, M. D., Sag Harbor, L. I., N. Y., inquired in 'Appeals to Readers' of Aug. 20, was written by William Cullen Bryant."

A copy of the poem, sent by George Floto, 186 Union Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been forwarded to our correspondent.

"C. M. G.," Hartford, Conn.: "Can you give me the name of the writer of the following lines, written in the style of 'Hiawatha':

> "'With the skin he made him mittens,
> And to have the warm side inside,
> Put the skin side inside outside,
> She to have the fur side inside.'"

We are under the impression that these lines are from "Lewis Carroll's" parody on Longfellow's poem, entitled "Hiawatha's Photographing," and that this parody first appeared in his "Rhyme and Reason," 1883. Dodgson's poems are published by the Macmillan Company.

"MEREDITH," Manchester, N. H.: "I have a most interesting book by a Miss Hannah Lynch, entitled 'George Meredith: A Study.' Can you tell me anything about Miss Lynch?"

Miss Lynch, who died in Paris last January, was an English writer long resident in that city, where she acted for a long period as French correspondent of The Academy. She was a clever and able writer in many paths of literature. Among her works of fiction were "Through Troubled Waters," 1885; "Denys D'Auvrillac: A Story of French Life," 1896; "The Autobiography of a Child," 1899, and "Clare Munro: The Story of a Mother and Daughter," 1900. Her suggestive little book on Meredith appeared in 1891. In addition she wrote "Toledo: The Story of an Old Spanish Capital," 1898, and [illegible] in Town and Country," 1901.

"A. L. R.," 145 Quincy [illegible]et, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "In 'Appeals to Readers' of July 16 'M. D.,' Keene, N. H., asked for information concerning a poem containing the lines:

> "'It happened once in days of yore
> When flowers could talk as you and I.'

"This poem may be found in a book of selections for children called 'The Child's Delight,' issued by Appleton in 1847. It is founded on 'an Irish legend,' and is entitled 'Flowers and the Fairy,' (no author given.) It is rather long to copy. In the same volume is a very pretty companion poem. Hope are given as anonymous."

JOSEPH A. BROHEL, [illegible]r Edge, N. J.: "In 'Appeals to Readers' of Aug. 27 W. C. Breckenridge, northwest corner of Twelfth and Spruce Streets, St. Louis, is the author of a poem beginning 'Hail the flaunting Jack!' The lines quoted are extract from a poem called 'The Flaunting Jack,' by Charles G. Halpine (Miles O'Reilly,) written at the time the fugitive slave, Anthony Burns, had been arrested in Boston on May 27, 1854, and President Pierce had ordered the cutter Morris to take him back to Virginia and slavery. It is almost impossible to hire any other vessel, as it was poor business for a craft to be carrying such freight under the Stars and Stripes, hence the inspiration for the poem. The New York Tribune of June 16, 1854, and is found in Halpine's published poems. It is too long for reprinting in full."

We thank other friends for information concerning the authorship of these verses.

"CURIOUS," 227 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, Washington, D. C.: "Can you give me any information about a book entitled 'Eclopoeia: American Rejected Addresses. Now First Published from the Original Manuscripts, New York, J. C. Derby'? The book is dedicated to the Directors of the Crystal Palace, and contains imitations of poems by Holmes, Bryant, Longfellow, &c., given over the initials. I seem to be unable to find any information about this volume in books of reference."

The authorship of this work, which is crudely written in imitation of the "Rejected Addresses" of Horatio and James Smith, is unknown to us. Can any of our readers aid "Curious"?

"CASTLE RACKRENT," Salem, Mass.: "Kindly favor me with a complete list of Maria Edgeworth's works."

"Letters to Literary Ladies," 1795; "The Parent's Assistant," first part, 1796, (complete in six volumes, 1800;) "Practical Education," 1798; "Castle Rackrent," 1800; "Early Lessons," 1801, (Continuation of Early Lessons," 1815;) "Belinda," 1801; "Moral Tales," 1801; "Irish Bulls," 1802; "Popular Tales," 1804; "A Modern Griselda," 1804; "Leonora," 1806; "Tales from Fashionable Life," 1809, (second series, 1812;) "Patronage," 1814; "Harrington," 1817; "Ormond," 1817; "Comic Dramas," 1817; "Frank," 1822; "Harry and Lucy Concluded," 1825; "Garry Owen," 1832, and "Helen," 1834. In 1820 she edited and concluded the "Memoirs" of her father, Richard Lovell Edgeworth.

"J. H.," New York City: "Will you kindly let me know whether the name of the author of 'Black Rock,' 'Sky Pilot,' &c., is Ralph Connor or Charles W. Gordon?"

The author is Charles W. Gordon. Ralph Connor is a pseudonym.

Appeals to Readers.

"J. L. D.," Upper Montclair, N. J.: "I am anxious to obtain the lines beginning 'Nowhere to go but out,' as quoted in an editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Aug. 11."

MISS S. FRIEDLANDER, care of William Lamb & Co., Norfolk, Va.: "Where can I find the following quotation: 'I'm like a snake, keep coiled up, for if you stretch your full length they will take your measurement.'"

"E. G. R.," 118 Chadwick Avenue, Newark, N. J.: "I would like to see a copy of Mahone's 'In Praise of Myself,' which I saw several months ago in a newspaper. It begins:

> "'I am sick of the tale of love,
> Of the prating of beautiful eyes:
> Of the ruby lips and the golden hair,
> And cheeks like morning skies.'"

"MRS. H. H.," 215 Eighth Fifteenth Street, New York City: "Can any reader help me to discover the authorship and the exact wording of a sentence which reads something like this: 'If man were what he ought to be, consider how all animals would love us.' Is it from the writings of Richard Jefferies?"

"H. E. H.," 168 State Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Will some reader kindly give me the name of the author of a recitation entitled 'The Confederate Sergeant,' and tell me where I can obtain a copy? It begins as follows:

> "'It was in the Valley of Shenandoah,
> General Stuart with a [illegible]el troop
> Was hanging on the [illegible]ral flank, &c.'"

Mayne Reid Again.

THE SCALP HUNTERS. By Capt. Mayne Reid. 12mo. Pp. 390. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.

Mayne Reid is a sort of reservoir of youth, youth as it was expected to be a generation ago; a real idol-worshipping youth, very different from the contemporary currency of precocious idol-breakers. So it is good to read the Captain again. He is an excellent antidote for the steady diet of the outpouring fiction of very modern young men and still more modern young women, all clever, more or less, and all carrying hatchets. Their hatchets are, however, not a bit like the hatchets called tomahawks, used for smashing skulls by Mayne Reid's scalp hunters out in a wonderful enchanted West, among flowers that never were, adventures that never could be, noble red men that only boys and boyllke romancers ever dreamed of, beautiful, golden-haired "females," whose only business is to be sweet, innocent, to have their eyes lighted with "the light of love," which should always be printed in italics, or to weep perhaps for the absent "lord of that little heart," and in absence grow fonder after a recipe now long ago forgotten. By all means read "The Scalp Hunters." Smile cynically, if you will, at what you find of real Victorian language and sentiment; for all your complacent, twisted grin, you'll keep on reading, you'll fear every time the hero gets a knife stuck in him that it is the wound that is mortal—though you know it never is; you will share the hero's pride in his "fleet Arab steed," who comes at his master's whistle, no matter what holds him, and you will follow with eagerness the same hero's elaborately complicated plans for rescuing his "betrothed" and other beautiful young "females" from the Apaches. Certainly you will—else you are no lover of the true romance, wherein Mr. Kipling says it is enough for him "to touch the garment's hem."
